Michael L. Goldberg Joins UJA Israel Tour

Michael L. Goldberg, son of Mr. and Mrs. Morton P. Goldberg, 8427 Springmill Road, will join 30 other students this summer in the United Jewish Appeal's fourth University Students Mission to Israel.

A senior at Yale University, majoring in philosophy, Michael has been selected by the UJA "for his potential for leadership on the campus and in his community," according to Charles Davidson, director of university programs.

Each student pays his own transportation and living expenses.

Young Goldberg told The Post and Opinion the nature of the program was to get college students to go to Israel and then back to their campuses to give the Israeli position on current events in the Middle East, a viewpoint, he said, that is not too well represented these days.

"One of the most important and effective weapons the Palestinian Liberation Movement has," he said, "are the Jews in the United States who are either too self-conscious or ashamed of their heritage, who speak against Israel."

He continued, "There are too many misconceptions and part of our mission is to clear up as many of those misconceptions as we can."

The students met in New York City on Wednesday for briefing and departed that evening. They will return to the United States on August 17. In addition to Israel, the group is scheduled to visit Geneva, Munich and Vienna.

Leading figures of overseas Jewish communities will discuss their problems and ways of life with the students who will also observe UJA's overseas beneficiary agencies: The Jewish Agency, Joint Distribution Committee, ORT (an organization devoted to job and technical training), and United HIAS Service in Europe and Israel.

JWF Slates Meeting; Six To Be Honored

LIEBERT I. MOSSLER

DR. ED GABOVITCH

The emphasis will be on Hooverwood, the new home for the aged, when the Jewish Welfare Federation holds its annual meeting next month.

The dairy dinner will be staged Tuesday, July 14, at Broadmoor Country Club, at $5.50 per person. Cocktails are set for 6:30 p.m., with the dinner an hour later.

The leadership responsible for the creation of Hooverwood, which was opened just a few short months ago, will be saluted by the Federation.

The committee responsible for the program includes Ralph Cole, Louis Marks, David Fogle, Martin Lerner and Mmes. Philip Falender, Philip Pecar, Sidney Tuchman, Walter E. Wolf Jr., Allan (Babs) Cohn, and Joseph Rothbard.

Liebert I. (Bud) Mossler, outgoing president of the Federation, will be honored. So will the presidents of the five local agencies — Walter E. Wolf Jr., of Hooverwood, Joseph Greenberg of the Jewish Community Relations Council, Gus Domont of the Jewish Educational Association, Jerome Leviton of Jewish Family & Children's Services, Inc., and Dr. Ed Gabovitch of the Jewish Community Center.

Also to be recognized and honored are all agency board members and the leadership of the highly successful 1970 JWF campaign.

Frank M. Newman will make his annual report as executive vice president of the Federation.

Other highlights include presentation of the David M. Cook and Lazure L. Goodman Young Leadership Awards and election of officers and election to the JWF board of directors and board of governors.

New Service Offered Teen-Agers, Parents

A new summer walk-in service for teenagers and their parents is being offered by the Jewish Family & Children Service Inc.

During the summer, parents and teen-agers have less structured time, problems are surfaced and this offers a prime free opportunity for persons to avail themselves of the service, the agency said.

The agency can arrange appointments without waiting the same day or the day after. If calls are received before 9:00 a.m., same day appointments can be arranged.

These appointments will be possible during June, July and August while regularly scheduled clients are on vacation.

The agency offers professional counseling for those who are having problems in the areas of marital, parent-child and individual counseling.

Fees are scaled according to ability to pay.

Class In Yoga Slated At Center

Instruction in the art of physical and mental rejuvenation through yoga will begin July 9 at the Jewish Community Center, under the direction of Mrs. Mary McIlwain. The eight-week series will be conducted from 10 to 11:15 a.m. on Thursday mornings.

Paid registration in advance is required. The class is open to beginners as well as others. Further information may be obtained by telephoning 251-9467.

Mrs. Fadely Named Teacher At JCCA

Mrs. Marjorie A. Fadely has been employed by the Jewish Community Center Association as teacher of the four-year-olds at the Center's K'tonton Pre-School, Dr. Edward R. Gabovitch, President of the Center announced today.

Mrs. Fadely earned her undergraduate degree at Purdue University, with coursework in child development, child psychology, early childhood education and experience in the laboratory school. She is presently enrolled in graduate classes in special education at Butler University.

MRS. MARJORIE FADELY

Col. Cohen Honored

Col. Sultan G. Cohen was honored at the annual meeting of the Indiana and Kentucky Society of Professional Engineers at a dinner last Saturday night.

Col. Cohen was honored as a founder and first national vice president of the Society and the organization gave him life membership.

After graduation, Mrs. Fadely was a therapist at LaRue Carter Hospital in both the adult and children's service. She subsequently taught nursery school in Germany, was a founder, participating mother and teacher of three and four-year-olds at the Prentice Co-operative Nursery School.

Most recently she has been an orientation leader, evaluator and member of the advisory council of the Indianapolis Council of Parent Co-operatives.

Mrs. Fadely and her husband, Jack L. Fadely, assistant professor of educational psychology at Butler University, have long been interested in early childhood development and education.

Registration is now being accepted for Center's K'tonton Pre-school for the enrollment of children who will be three years of age or older as of October 1, 1970. For further information, call the Center, 251-9467.

Birth Reported

Mr. and Mrs. Karl Krakovitz, 1051 Navajo Trail, are the parents of a son, Paul Rabin, born June 11 at Methodist Hospital. Grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Sam Rabin and Mrs. Arthur Krakovitz.

'Bulb' To End Run

Final showing of "The Wrong Way Light Bulb" at the Theater-In-The Woods, 6701 Hoover Road, will be held June 27 with curtain time at 8:30 p.m. Reservations and ticket information are available at the Jewish Community Center.

Farrell Scott Tribute
Richly Deserved

By ANNA Z. ADLER

A short while ago the Indianapolis Hebrew Congregation paid a well-deserved tribute to Farrell Scott, whose fine tenor voice has led the choir at the Temple over a period spanning 40 years. So impassioned is his treatment of the Hebrew hymns that it is difficult to conceive of his singing as not issuing from the heartfelt convictions of his own faith.

Under his able leadership a choir has been molded of truly outstanding quality. At a time when most voices have deteriorated in one aspect, if not alas all the way along the line, his voice has retained its pristine purity; and he has assembled a choir of other superior voices. Strictly from the musical standpoint, it is a pleasure to listen to them.

IT IS NECESSARY, however, to consider the purpose in the music of the service. Surely it is intended to enhance the meaningfulness of the worship, to arouse an emotional response, to create a sense of immediacy and of linking with the past. This means greater involvement, more participation on the part of the congregation. It is my judgment that many of the selections sung by the choir are far too difficult for the untrained voice to follow. The desire to participate is thwarted by music which ranges into heights unattainable by voices which are strictly run of the mill.

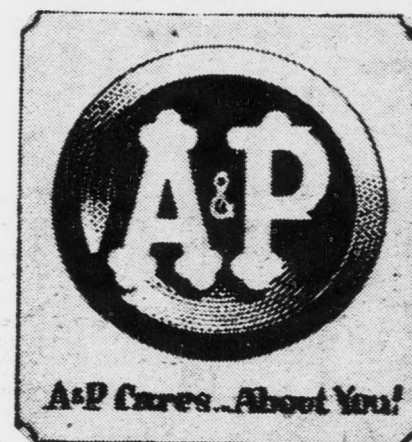

Not as a musician but as one who has ever felt a strong sense of the peoplehood of Jewry, I lean towards hymns based on Hebraic melodies. They satisfy a certain yearning within me which other forms of music, no matter how splendid from an operatic standpoint, cannot reach or influence. In fact, the service would be made far more meaningful for me if it included a well-trained cantor. I understand that this idea, which had been seriously considered, has been rejected primarily because of budgetary considerations.

I AM WELL aware that I am treading on delicate ground and am dealing with a highly controversial subject. Some members of the congregation, undoubtedly dismayed by every departure from the extreme position taken by the Reform movement in its early rebellion against ritualization of religion, would probably consider this a bit too much. I am afraid these somewhat anachronistic dissenters are out of touch with the realities of present-day Reform Judaism. They are seemingly unaware that the type of service they advocate, stripped of emotion and color, has been tried and found wanting. Since they are not hesitant in making their viewpoint known, I believe in all fairness they should concede to others the right to express a dissenting opinion.

All this in no way is intended as a disparagement of the contribution of Farrell Scott. He has been a devoted servant of the Temple, and his voice has brought much beauty to its services. Actually in the whole history of Jewish music a considerable degree of interchange, of borrowing, between the Jewish and the non-Jewish music world has continually taken place. The movement has gone first one way and then another.

But to return to Mr. Scott. To have served so well and so faithfully for 40 years — surely that is beyond the call of duty!

ISRAEL DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

The state of Israel will be open to the immigration of Jews from all countries of their dispersion; will promote the development of the country for the benefit of all its inhabitants; will be based on the principles of liberty, justice and peace as conceived by the Prophets of Israel; will uphold the full social and political equality of all its citizens, without distinction of religion, race or sex; will guarantee freedom of religion, conscience, education and culture; will safeguard the Holy Places of all religions; and will loyally uphold the principles of the United Nations Charter.

The State of Israel will be ready to cooperate with the organs and representatives of the United Nations in the implementation of the Resolution of the Assembly of November 29, 1947, and will take steps to bring about the Economic Union over the whole of Palestine.

We appeal to the United Nations to assist the Jewish people in the building of its State and to admit Israel into the family of nations.

In the midst of wanton aggression, we yet call upon the Arab inhabitants of the State of Israel to preserve the ways of peace and play their part in the development of the State, on the basis of full and equal citizenship and due representation in all its bodies and institutions — provisional and permanent.

We extend our hand in peace and neighborliness to all the neighboring states and their peoples and invite them to cooperate with the independent Jewish nation for the common good of all. The State of Israel is preparing to make its contribution to the progress of the Middle East as a whole.

Our call goes out to the Jewish people all over the world to rally to our side in the task of immigration and development and to stand by us in the great struggle for the fulfillment of the dream of generations for the redemption of Israel.

With trust in Almighty God, we set our hand to this Declaration, at this Session of the Provisional State Council, on the soil of the Homeland, in the city of Tel Aviv, on this Sabbath eve, the fifth of Iyar, 5708, the fourteenth day of May, 1948.

Message To World Jewry

from Mrs. Golda Meir

"We begin with the words that are heard now all over Israel. 'Mo'adim I'simchah Chag Sameach' (Happy Holiday).

Mrs. Meir

People in its homeland. To my sorrow, this is still not a day of peace in Israel.

You know as well as we do that, had it depended upon us, there would not have been the war in '67. We came to this land to rebuild it because it is ours — in peace with our neighbors, in peace with those whom we found in our land and in the surrounding countries. We wanted to work, to restore the glory of this country.

We went down to the desert, we went up to the hills. Nobody had cared enough for this land in order to build and develop it. We came back with all the fervor and enthusiasm and the decision that this was going to be the Land of Israel, a land of peace, dedicated to co-operation with its neighbors.

THIS WAS NOT, to our sorrow, to be our fate. We have not yet seen the slightest sign from any one of our neighbors that they are prepared for this. But we are confident that the day must come. How soon it will come, we cannot say. But we are convinced of one thing: as long as Israel can defend herself, the day of peace grows closer.

Despite the pressures and tension, Israel is ever planning its future, its development proceeding apace. This is the Israel that every day receives new immigrants, provides them with housing, retains them for their economic absorption. This is an Israel with institutions of higher learning springing up in various parts of the country — in addition to the Hebrew University and the Technion, there are now the Tel Aviv, Bar Ilan and Haifa universities, and one starting in Beersheba.

And this is Israel which never for a moment forgets those millions of Jews behind the Iron Curtain, in Soviet Russia, who are not allowed free expression, and hopes that they will be permitted to fulfil their deepest aspiration — to come and be with us and co-operate in this wonderful, historical enterprise of an ancient people exiled from its land twice in its history, and now come back to rebuild it on lasting foundations.

WE BELIEVE THE day will come when many of them — tens and hundreds of thousands of Soviet Jews — will come.

And this is Israel, whose sons and daughters after three years are still on the borders facing the enemy. This is Israel, where not one family has deserted the agricultural settlements in the Jordan and Beisan valleys, on the Syrian and the Lebanese borders, despite the shelling day and night, despite the fact that they have children who have never slept one night above ground, spending most of their lives underground in the shelters. None have left the front-line — in the settlements, in Beisan and in Kiryat Shmoneh, whose inhabitants have recently come to this country, and have not had the experience of the pioneers in "Haganah," in self-defence. They too have become part and parcel of the spirit and life of the country and have no intention of budging from the place in which they have a right to live.

And this is Israel which knows that you all, no matter where you are, no matter what part of the world you are in, are with her in spirit day and night. You are with us when we celebrate, you are with us on the many days of sorrow when our best sons fall in battle.

YOU ARE WITH us at every moment. You are with us when we build; you are with us when we first send our little ones to the kindergartens; you are with us in the desert; you are with us in the hills; you are with us on the bank of the Suez Canal and on the Golan Heights.

As long as you are with us, as I have so often said, we can take it. And I know that we can because we have no alternative. We will not run away. This is ours. Here we stay. We know that you realized now probably more than ever before that our destinies are indivisibly linked.

Captured Terrorists Get Best Medical Care

By JOSEPH ZURIEL

Killing soldiers and civilians and carrying out sabotage in public places is the objective of all Arab infiltrators. When, however, they are wounded and end up in Israeli hospitals, they are faced with a situation which they find hard to fathom. Jewish doctors and nurses treat them with the same devotion and care that they extend to the Israeli soldiers lying beside them.

This is not so much the policy of the Israel Government as the humane outlook of the Israelis, soldiers and civilians alike. It revealed itself in the Six Day War when Jewish and Arab wounded were brought to the Hadassah Medical Centre in Jerusalem, and when Jewish soldiers who were less seriously wounded asked the doctors to treat the Jordanians whose wounds were far more serious first.

IN THE VARIOUS departments of the Hadassah Medical Center in Jerusalem, this humane outlook is being put into practice daily. Although there are a sufficient number of Arab hospitals functioning in East Jerusalem and in the Israel-held territories, the Arabs prefer to be treated by Jewish doctors. Some 100 Arab patients come daily for treatment at the Hadassah hospital in Jerusalem. They suffer from various diseases: Cancer, eye ailments, heart ailments, kidney trouble, jaundice. In the children's wards they account for no fewer than 30 per cent of the patients. No one as much as thinks of reducing their number: as human beings, they are entitled to medical treatment.

The presence of Arab patients at the Hadassah and other hospitals is something self-understood. So far no fewer than 55 open heart operations on Arab patients have been performed at the Hadassah hospital. In other hospitals, thousands of Arabs in the occupied territories have received medical treatment.

There are records of special cases. About six months ago, an Arab woman living in Jordan was told by her doctor that her days were numbered. A relative living in East Jerusalem suggested that she come over to Israel for treatment. Reluctantly, she agreed, and the Israel Authorities made her transfer possible and had her admitted to the Beilinson hospital in Petah Tikva where she underwent an open heart operation. She is now back with her family in Amman, fully restored to health. There is the case also of an Arab truck driver and a boy from Jordan who had been given no more than a month or two to live and are now fully recovered.

THE HUMANE TEST of the Israeli doctors and nurses, however, lies in the treatment they accord to wounded saboteurs who had come to Israel to kill and destroy. Here the doctors and nurses face difficult spiritual predicaments.

There is the case of two young people, an Arab and a Jew, lying side by side in hospital. The former had infiltrated into Israel in order to kill Jewish soldiers. In an exchange of fire the two were wounded, and now they are both hospitalized in one and the same ward.

Or take the Israeli soldier who was brought to the Hadassah hospital in Jerusalem in a serious condition. All the efforts to save his life failed. Beside him lay an Arab saboteur also seriously wounded, who re-

Captured Terrorists

(Continued from Preceding Pg.) But the doctors and nurses received identical treatment and overcome their personal feelings and treat saboteurs in the same way as they would ordinary patients in need of medical attention. They have done so for the past three years. The exact number of saboteurs hospitalized in Israeli hospitals is not known: in the Hadassah hospital alone over 50 of them received treatment and have all survived.

ALL THAT IS EXPECTED of the wounded saboteurs is that they conduct themselves properly. The majority receive their treatment with "tacit thankfulness". Some, however, make special demands, like the one who threatened to hunger strike unless an Arab nurse was appointed to take care of him.

Hypocrisy and mendacity are a marked feature of most of the wounded Arab saboteurs. While in hospital they shower praises upon the doctors, or remain satisfied with a mere "thank you". On leaving hospital, however, they spread lies about "torture" and "experiments" carried out upon them.

Two months ago, three Arab saboteurs who owe their lives to the treatment received at the Hadassah, returned to Jordan. On leaving they were profuse in their thanks for the care they received and declared they would never forget it. But the following day, they appeared over the Jordan radio and television network, claiming that their legs had been amputated unnecessarily, that Jewish doctors were maltreating Arab patients and that they had witnessed an Israeli doctor applying a burning cigarette to the eye of a wounded Arab, blinding him.

Some people ask whether in these circumstances one should not draw the necessary conclusions and send all wounded Arab saboteurs to the backward hospitals in East Jerusalem and the occupied areas. But the humane values that govern the weight than the false horror work of the Israeli doctors and stories spread by the Arab nurses are infinitely of greater saboteurs.

Israelis Ponder Plight

By ZVI BEN MOSHE

As Israel celebrated her 22nd year of independence the perspective of the observer seemed to stretch beyond the twelve month period commonly surveyed at such a time. It stretched back to May 1967, a starting point that has begun to loom almost as large as that most important of beginnings — May 1948.

The new challenges to Israel's security in May 1970 inevitably led to comparisons with the events of the May three years ago. The afternoon paper, Maariv, felt that similarities were not hard to find: It listed, among others, Nasser's newly found aggressive confidence backed with increased Soviet support, and America's delay in replying to the latest Russian act of intervention in the Middle East conflict.

Yet, all this notwithstanding, there were tremendous differences, wrote the paper. Israel's strategic situation was far superior on all fronts, and her defense forces were very much stronger than in 1967. The mood of May 1967, therefore, need not bring in its wake another 'June 1967'. And international action — especially

"Duty and courage were always fierce and fiery words. They moved Moses and David and Ezra and the Maccabees. And they move the sons of Israel today. But vision and perseverance were perhaps even more important words — because they gave sustenance for the long, long endurance required to face a future with confidence." — Herbert A. Friedman, UJA Executive Chairman.

"How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together." — Psalms.

that of the Americans could not easily prevent such a Lamerhav. But it was the only one among all the states still development.

ISRAEL WAS no longer the youngest, and by no means the smallest of states in the world, facing a threat to her very existence.

This year, the proximity of Israel's Day of Remembrance for the war dead and Independence Day — they follow one another — brought home all too painfully the price in human lives the country was paying for her independence, wrote Davar of the Labor Federation. It was not surprising that the anniversary found Israelis not in the best of moods to celebrate.

It was this theme — the cost of young human life — which ran most insistently throughout the comment. No one who had had any contact with the families involved during the past year could fail to see how deeply the people of Israel wanted peace, wrote a military reporter in one of the papers. But this, too, was contrasted with the alternative, even harshly at times.

SURVEYING THE military situation, Colonel Yehuda Wallach stressed that the cease fire lines were infinitely more defensible than the armistice lines established in 1948, and the policy, therefore, of not moving from the cease fire positions until peace was declared, made sense.

Nasser had failed, too, in his War of Attrition waged after publicly declaring that the cease fire was no longer in force. His subsequent appeal to the Russians, and the latest Soviet involvement certainly added a new dimension to the conflict. But despite the unpleasant prospect of a possible direct confrontation between Israeli and Russian pilots, it would be hard to assume that the Israel Defense Forces would relinquish their principle of active defense of the cease fire positions. And the Russians were certainly planning their moves with the utmost care, conscious that a miscalculation could lift the conflict out of its present limitations into a global confrontation.

The Prime Minister, too, in an interview for Independence Day, did not believe that Israel's positions had worsened basically, although the situation at the Suez Canal was serious once more. But she was confident that Israel would overcome this difficulty as other problems had been solved in the past. Asked to look five years head, Mrs. Meir said she could not promise the longed-for peace. For it had been shown beyond question that the Arabs did not want peace at the moment, and a change in the situation was not dependent on Israel's attitude.

FUNDAMENTALLY, Israel had not lost the support of friends abroad, and as for the Jewish people outside Israel, the link had ever been stronger.

Questioned about recent domestic developments, about opposition to the policy of a Government which enjoyed the support of ninety per cent of parliament, Mrs. Meir said: "I know the situation is not easy. The people have been at war for three years, and sacrifices are being made. Perhaps there are people who think it would be better to surrender, instead of fighting back. We are a democratic state, and people have a right to say this. But I don't have to accept it. I know what surrender means. It is an illusion to think that if we surrender we shall remain alive. I know that surrender means annihilation."

Writing in Maariv, Shmuel Shnitzer's reflections on independence took a different track. One really needed to look back further in time to get the true perspective, he wrote. Israel's yesterday was Auschwitz. Israelis tend to forget what the Jewish state means in security for the Jewish people. Auschwitz was not only the past, it was also an alternative. When the young Liberals in Britain, and new-leftists elsewhere spoke out against the establishment of an independent Jewish state, they were calling for a return to the previous state of insecurity, and were in effect saying that the Jewish people had no right to live. The price of independence is very dear, but when it appears impossible at times, it would be well to recall the alternative of the holocaust. All the lives lost in the past hundred years of fighting for, and defending, an independent Jewish state, did not equal the price of two days at Auschwitz.

THE NATIONAL RELIGIOUS Party newspaper, Hatzofeh, noted that despite the fact that Israel had in effect been at war for three years, life in all its aspects had continued normally. All state services were functioning properly, thousands of immigrants were being absorbed, and the state continued to make cultural and economic progress.

Taking up this theme Amnon Rubinstein in Haaretz pointed out that in the three years a hundred thousand newcomers had arrived — leaving countries where their individual lives were not in danger for a country where they would have to fight to live. Although there were serious economic problems, the GNP had grown in an unprecedented fashion, and the economic gap between Israel and the Arab states had even widened. But above all, despite grim forecasts to the contrary, Israel had succeeded in maintaining a regime of freedom of expression unparalleled in war time. And to see this in its proper perspective it was worth recalling what had happened to countries like England and the United States during a period of war. Thousands of American citizens had been deprived of their freedom, others sentenced to death for collaboration. Israel had not chosen this path.

Nor had the youth lost its sensitivity or human qualities. Since May 1967 not a single song had been written which could be described as a war song, or a song advocating hatred of the enemy. Most of the themes expressed the pain and suffering of war, and the deep yearning for peace.

WHAT ABOUT peace then? The hope for peace was undimmed, was the feeling, but it was more soberly contemplated now than in the first heady days after the Six Day War. As the Jerusalem Post put it: "There is no longer any road to instant peace or security by magic formula, just as there was no instant state, but a slow and hazardous process of building: As the state was built by faith and effort, so peace will be built."

Hebrew Replaces Indian

The American tradition in the Jewish community of using Indian titles for their camps may be losing out to Hebrew as this photo shows. Mrs. Edward Mason, president of the Worcester, Mass. Jewish Community Center and executive director Joshua B. Malks, examine the new sign over the gymnasium. Other rooms in the Center have similarly been designated in Hebrew. The Hebrew transliteration for gymnasium is Oo-lom Hit-om-loot.

Joy Turns To Tragedy; Bar Mitzvah Boy Killed

By JEAN HERSCHAFT

NEW YORK (P-O) — Teachers and students of Boody Junior High School in Brooklyn wanted just the right gift for the Bar Mitzvah of David Ehrlich, one of the school's best students.

They decided to purchase Jewish National Fund Israel tree certificates in honor of David's big day.

Instead, the trees will be planted in memory of David, following a tragic accident.

It happened about 15 minutes after school had been dismissed, as David and two friends were boarding a subway train for the usual 10-minute ride home to Beach Haven, the apartment complex where all three boys lived.

Since the loss of his mother two years ago, David was marked by a quiet sorrow. A concerned and thoughtful youngster, his teachers told The Post and Opinion, he never tarried after school, knowing that an aunt who assumed his care would worry.

And responsible to his Hebrew school studies at Mogen David Jewish Center, he had just enough time to drop off his English books in exchange for picking up the Hebrew books and going to Talmud Torah.

The accident occurred as he and his two friends were engaged with the excitement talk that always precedes a Bar Mitzvah, discussing little details. As they ambled from one subway car to another, other trains roared on.

Suddenly, the cars lurched. David, caught between two cars, was hurled to the tracks where his hand hit the third rail, electrocuting him while some six rail cars continued passing over the body. David's two friends watched the whole event and screamed in horror.

The residents of Beach Haven and the students and faculty at Boody Junior High School wept as young David was put to rest the following day.

The Bar Mitzvah had been but a few short days away, the teachers said, and they are determined that memorial of trees in Israel for David is the best way for the school to remember him.

As one Boody student said, "The trees will grow . . . and live for David."

James Gray Named Managing Editor

The Post and Opinion has named James Gray managing editor. Gray was the P-O correspondent in Pittsburgh.

He graduated in May from Duquesne University, Pittsburgh, with a bachelor's degree in journalism. While in Pittsburgh he was with The Pittsburgh Press as a reporter for two years.

While a junior at Duquesne, he published and edited his own "above ground" paper.

In addition to being the Post and Opinion's stringer in Pittsburgh, he was also a correspondent for Time Magazine there. He recently returned from a one-month writing tour of England, Sweden and Denmark.

4 of 38 Rabbis Join Chaplaincy

NEW YORK — With only four of the 38 newly-ordained Conservative rabbis entering the chaplaincy, the desperate shortage of Jewish chaplains was hardly dented. Three years ago, all the members of the Seminary's graduating class would have entered the chaplaincy.

Answering one of the objections raised most often by graduating rabbis who shun the chaplaincy despite the great need, James Lebeau, one of the four who have entered the chaplaincy said:

"Though I know I will have to restrict my public statements and activities while in service, I suggest that many of my colleagues in civilian life also find themselves limiting their participation in a variety of events and tempering statements from the pulpit because of congregational sentiments and restrictions."

Museum Seizes Panther Pamphlets

NEW YORK — Pamphlets of Black Panther literature have been removed from a table in the Jewish Museum here at which members of the New York Artists Strike Against Racism, Sexism, Repression and War have been distributing literature of a political nature.

The New York Times reported that the artists charged the museum with censorship, but David Finn, chairman of the museum's board of governors said, "One of our basic rules is that nothing will be shown in the museum that is offensive to anybody of any religious persuasion."

Removal of the pamphlets was touched off when the board received complaints from some of its members and visitors to the museum who objected to the display which contained (in the past) "anti-Semitic and anti-Zionist statements."

The table, which was set up on June 4, according to a museum spokesman, attracted much attention and complaints were soon received by the museum and the Jewish Theological Seminary, parent body of the exhibition hall.

One of the quotes which was apparently most offensive referred to "U.S. warmongers in Vietnam, Cambodia and Palestine." Apparently offense was taken to the term Palestine which is no longer accepted by Zionists.

The original resolution of the museum's board of governors which provides for the table notes that material to be distributed must be approved by the museum director and an ad hoc committee of the board.

Diplomacy Steals Show In Mideast

The mideast pot was steaming this week as diplomacy seemed to have replaced hostilities in the headlines.

Even Cairo was believed to be "talking" peace, although this well could be aimed at stymieing the contemplated sale of Phantom Jets to Israel by the United States.

Heads of Arab states met in Libya ostensibly to mark the American evacuation of the Wheelus Air Base, but it was clear that the next step in the war of attrition on Israel was the main question.

VERY LIKELY THE subject touched on Russia and her role in bolstering Egypt's defenses to the extent of flying missions. The Israel tactic of confining her air raids, which have gone into their fourth straight week of daily raids, has placed Egypt in the same position as she was when Israeli planes were dropping bombs close to Cairo. Egypt must decide whether to permit Soviet forces to take on added duties in order to counter the heavy toll the Israeli raids are taking.

Israel added a new dimension — a successful commando raid across the Suez — to match the two that Egypt made earlier.

One sortie by Israeli commandos took them deep into Syria in two separate forays not too far from Damascus. The raids were in answer to escalation by Syrian army forces of attacks on Israeli positions and colonies on the Golan Heights. One of the sites under attack was a Syrian army camp which about 1,000 soldiers were believed to occupy.

THE ALTERNATIVE, a peaceful solution, probably also got consideration. Cairo has dropped her brassy tone, and indicates that she will be willing to consider the new proposals which the United States has said she is preparing to make. At least the United States leaders are welcome in Cairo once again, even if diplomatic relations still remain broken.

On the Jordanian side, an uneasy truce reigns between Hussein and the guerrillas. It is obvious that Hussein did not add strength to his position in the civil war that raged for almost a week, taking a toll conservatively estimated at 500 dead. Hussein's dismissal of his uncle as head of the armed forces, plus another general at the demand of the liberation forces was not expected to improve his stature. Hussein's hope rests on the Arab Legion, which is fiercely loyal to him and rejected overtures from the liberation elements to desert during the fighting.

THE QUESTION OF how much danger the guerrilla fighters present to the governments of Lebanon and Jordan has arisen. The popularity of the guerrillas has risen to heights not believed possible only a few short weeks ago. Whether these forces are a threat to other regimes such as Egypt and Syria is not being overlooked.

A formal visit to Italy by Abba Eban may have some political implications, but it is generally known that although Italy is willing to act as an honest broker between Israel and the Arabs, both sides recognize that she is in no position to sway the principals, the United States and Soviet Russia, who will make the eventual decisions.

Even U Thant, who spent five days consulting with Soviet leaders in Moscow, has put in his two cents worth. Except to use the diplomatic term "useful" to describe the talks, there was no inkling of their import.

CONTINUED HINTS from Washington and the statement by Ambassador Charles W. Yost, U.S. permanent representative to the United Nations that a new peace proposal by the United States would be made soon, provided additional heat under the boiling diplomatic pot. Israel knows that Secretary of State William Rogers will launch a new peace offensive, but whether Cairo or Jerusalem have any idea what these "new" proposals contain is unknown.

The on again off again sale of Phantom Jets to Israel, only part of Israel's request, should be announced before this issue of The P-O is off the press. It is generally known that no figure on the amount of jets Israel will be permitted to purchase will be announced.

Smith Denied Money For Road

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Funds to build a road to a shrine built by anti-Semite Gerald L.K. Smith, which already had been cleared, have been denied.

U.S. Secretary of Transportation John Volpe, after reviewing the proposal for the $277,000 expenditure, said approval has been withheld because the cost "was not supported by the road service that would be provided."

The shrine, a seven-story high statue of Christ, was located at Eureka Springs, Ark., a former celebrated spa which has long since lost its attractiveness and which has responded to the appeal that the notorious anti-Semite might restore its place in the limelight.

Women Boycott Tea At Golf Club

WINDSOR, Ont. — A tea for volunteers of this year's cancer fund drive at the Essex Golf and Country Club was boycotted by Jewish women campaign workers as a demonstration against club membership policies barring Jews.

The Windsor Star, siding with the Jewish women in an editorial entitled, "Justified Boycott," said, "For members to remain silent on the issue is to indicate that they abide by the discriminatory policy."

"Surely there are enough Canadians in the Essex Golf and Country Club who are opposed to any form of discrimination that they will either challenge their club's policy or resign as a matter of principle."

Jewish Ferment On Campus Defined

By HAROLD GOLDBERG

"...Almost all (newly committed) Jews want to reintroduce Jewishness ... into Jewish America. While there is no agreement about these Jewish values and norms of behavior, there is great sympathy with each other's attempt to define and live them. Joel Harris, with the tsitsis hanging from under his dashiki, Keither Karnofsky with his hippie beard and hairdo and his talk about Jewing it, Howard Smith, a typical physics graduate student in Berkeley, and Multimedia chaplain Nick Berman at Antioch, are much closer to each other in their vision of the Jewish community, than they are to the spokesmen of established Judaism."

Itzhak Epstein, Nov., 1969
Besides the fact that Joel Harris, whom I have recently been privileged to get to know, no longer wears a dashiki, the above quote no longer captures the spirit of the Jewish "radical" movement. The movement has now splintered into many different directions, each one arguing with the other as much as with the Jewish Establishment. Perhaps the best way to understand this phenomenon is by debunking the word "radical." A catch-all word, "radical" is the term which Jewish students of innumerable ideologies attach to themselves. As such, it says very little. Furthermore, for Jews who are seeking roots in Jewish history, "radical" is both an incorrect and demeaning term.

But we are jumping a bit ahead of ourselves.

A whole range of ideologies among my contemporaries, parading under such intriguing titles as "radical Zionist," "neo-Bundist," "Diaspora nationalist," have sprung up. Underneath the diversity lies a fundamental division between Jewish students who are serious in their search for their Jewish roots and those who are not. To the former group, the term "radical" is inapplicable and undesirable because — in the current context — it is a borrowed term from the New Leftist, student sub-culture. The decision to stop borrowing uncritically from every element of American culture is the first step taken by Jewish students who are seriously trying to find themselves as Jews.

INSTEAD OF defining themselves by someone else's standards, serious Jewish searchers today are applying their energies (with varying degrees of intensity) to looking into their own past. They do not concentrate on Marx, on Kant, or on money making money, but on Wiesel, on Buber, and on studying traditional Jewish sources. Their heroes do not include FDR or Churchill but Kochubievsky (imprisoned in the USSR for the "crime of Zionism") and the Sabra (although our Jewish youth are presently disillusioned with Israeli policy toward the Palestinians.) They do not read Commentary Magazine, and indeed, few will read this report; they do read Response Magazine and one or more of a host of new newspapers published by Jewish students.

In short, the serious Jewish student does not make a point of calling himself "radical" because he is not hung up on establishing his credentials with the New Left.

ON THE OTHER hand, other young Jews (who may not even be below thirty any more) who are trying to figure out what it is to be Jewish for the first time in their lives have not yet reached the level of commitment where struggling to define Jewishness and to live as a Jew is seen as one's vocation (not avocation), and where the necessity for serious study of Jewish history and traditional sources is recognized. Among such people, more facile identification of "Jewish" ideals with various contemporary movements — e.g., the anti-war movement — takes place.

The above distinction is not iron clad, for some serious Jewish students are also committed to political activism. In addition, it should be noted that with the renewed interest in Judaism by previously alienated Jewish youth, many of the established Zionist youth groups and Orthodox students are riding the tide. In the midst of unprecedented demands made upon the Jewish Establishment for increased allocations for Jewish education, and for more radical (in the current New Leftist sense) stance on contemporary political issues such as the Vietnam war, Zionist groups have been able to secure more membership and muster more power with their parent organizations.

ALSO, ORTHODOX students, particularly at Yeshiva University, who have been concerned with the spiritual state of American Jewish life for quite a while, have become much more emboldened in their tactics and goals. Witness the ongoing revolt at Y.U.

One type of new group which, while gaining the support of all of the above, is distinct from them, is that which is concerned with the plight of Soviet Jews.

The above sketch, by no means complete and perforce oversimplified, should nonetheless serve us in our exploration of non-alienated Jewish student.

Survey Discloses Link In Sexuality, Religion

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A massive survey in Psychology Today magazine says there is a definite relationship between sexuality and religion.

The survey, under the direction of Dr. Robert Athanasios of John Hopkins University, reports that "If you are a religious conservative, chances are your views on sex, like your sexual practices, will be conservative, too."

According to the survey, Jews and atheists tend to be most liberal in their attitudes on sex, while Protestants and Catholics fall on the conservative side.

However, while Jews are tolerant of those in sexually unorthodox behavior, their practice is similar to conservative Catholics and Protestants concerning a strong family life.

Jews on the whole, the survey says, tend to disapprove personally of such ideas as group marriage, extra-marital sex and mate swapping, and they are less likely than other groups to have done any of these things.

Ordered Down, Cross Standing

EUGENE, Ore. — The 51-foot concrete cross that rests on a hill overlooking this college town has not seen the last of the five-year controversy over its appearance as a gift from a local contractor.

The latest ruling has come from the Lane County Circuit Court which has ordered the cross removed. Opponents, anticipating the ruling, are filing a motion to have the cross considered a war memorial. The case, in which the American Jewish Congress has been involved, has gone to the Supreme Court which refused to act, thus validating the removal of the cross on the basis of the First Amendment.

Tel Aviv's Beaches Crowded, Polluted

TEL AVIV — Though the major worry here is, of course, the war, the local citizenry and tourists have two more problems to add to their lists: overcrowded beaches and water pollution.

The shores are not as narrow this year, since the construction of two giant T-shaped breakwaters, which have allowed a shoreward movement of sand. But the normally blue-green Mediterranean, as one mother said, "... is nauseating. I don't trust this water enough to even let my youngsters put their feet in it."

Consequently, there is very little, if any, swimming and the beaches overflow with sun worshippers, eager to bronze their bodies.

A former El Al stewardess described the polluted water this way: "It doesn't look so bad from down here. When you are in the water you just notice that it isn't as transparent as it should be. But if you fly over this area you see that the bathers are actually in a large brown spot on the pretty blue-green. This spot wanders up and down the coast."

Tel Aviv City clerk Zvi Aviguy said the problem will only be solved when the Dan Region Sewage Union's lagoons near Rishon LeZion are completed and begin absorbing Tel Aviv's wastes.

The water was first polluted more than 20 years ago when waste was simply piped out to sea. Until five years ago bathing was forbidden off Tel Aviv and the situation has not improved since the beaches have been reopened.

The Ministry of Health has consistently warned bathers during the last few years that Tel Aviv beaches are polluted. Both the Ministry and the city, however, maintain that the water is relatively safe when the sea is calm.

When winds are rough, however, the waves bring waste closer to the shore. "But then," said Mr. Aviguy, "bathing is not permitted anyway."

Writing in the Jerusalem Post, reporter Sarah Honig said, "U.F.O.s for Tel Avivians are the unidentifiable floating objects which they sometimes encounter in the sea."

"That is why your attitude to them will probably depend on whether you merely like to sunbathe or whether you also enjoy a plunge in the Mediterranean."

"Those who belong to the first category are far happier with some of the city's beaches this bathing season than they have been in previous years. Those, however, who consider a visit to the seaside incomplete without a splash and a swim are as unhappy as ever."

Israel Building Own Fighter Jets?

TEL AVIV — Two aviation magazines have reported independently that Israel is ready to build its own fighter planes. The plane would be a multi-purpose fighter aircraft, and one of the magazines, Aviation Weekly, stated that it would be in service by the end of this year or early next year.

The second magazine gave additional details. "Interavia" says Israel is working on a very advanced and novel design aircraft with a delta-wing protruding from mid-body (instead of being underslung as in the case of the Mirage). The plane is said to incorporate expandable surfaces (not backward-folding wings) which are said to add considerably to the airworthiness and overall performance of the plane.

"Interavia" claims a model of the plane is now undergoing wind tunnel tests in some unnamed European country.

Passover Gift - El Al's Jumbo

TEL AVIV — El Al, which has reported a huge profit, — 5 million Israel pounds for its fiscal year, may be flying the jumbo B-747 for the Passover tourist rush next year. Previously the plane was to be available by next summer.

El Al will get the first long-range version of the jet, which will carry 400 passengers non-stop from New York to Lod. For some passengers there will be a disappointment. The bar on similar jets is being replaced with 10 first class passenger seats. Another change will be additional wash rooms, exceeding the number on the planes ordered by other airlines.

TWA which was to be the first to fly the jumbo planes to Israel has agreed to postpone their introduction until Israel gets her jumbo jets.

Engineers, Social Workers Feeling Scarcity Of Jobs

By DAVID WEISSMAN

LOS ANGELES (P-O) — With a rise in the unemployment rate to 5.9 per cent in the state of California (a total of 470,000), a flood of Jewish unemployed are seeking jobs from the Jewish Vocational Service.

Applicants to the JVS, hitherto quite rare, include engineers from the aerospace industry and college graduates.

Because of various cutbacks in southern California defense complexes and educational subsidies to the universities, finding jobs for engineers who not long ago were in great demand in private industry or governmental agencies is rough, said Morris Grumer, JVS director.

College graduates are registering with the JVS in larger numbers than aerospace engineers. Generally, said Grumer, these graduates are under 30 years of age, with degrees in social science. They have planned people-oriented careers, such as social welfare. "But there are few jobs open," says Grumer, "because of reduced government allocations to the welfare agencies."

Arabic Culture Must Be Studied

NEW YORK — Calling on Jews to show greater knowledge and understanding of the Arab world's language, culture and aspirations, an Israeli scholar asserted that otherwise there will be no peaceful solution in the Middle East.

Prof. Zvi Javetz, chairman of the Department of History at Tel Aviv University, told Labor Zionists that many Jews can quote Heine, Shakespeare and Moliere, but know no Arabic literature. You will find Israelis who can speak nine or 10 languages, but not a single word of Arabic. One of the major problems which faces Israeli society is that of communications.

Paris Suburb Is Calm After Arab - Jew Riots

PARIS — Suburban Belleville returned to calm here following riots between Tunisian Jews and Algerians which started as a barroom argument between a Jew and an Algerian.

The New York Times reported that hundreds of Algerians had roamed the neighborhood armed with stones, clubs and iron bars. The area is inhabited mainly by poor Jewish refugees from Tunisia and on "good" days, Moslems from all over Paris come to shop for North African-style foods and pastries.

The latest rioting lasted just a little more than an hour and when police finally restored order, 28 stores and cafes, mostly Jewish-owned had been sacked; several cars had been burned. There were more than 30 arrests, mostly Algerians and several policemen and other citizens sustained minor injuries.

Local Jewish inhabitants charge the Algerians with provoking the incident and the Arabs charged the Jews. "They always strike first," said one Algerian.

Several Jews here said the occurrence was no accident because of its proximity to the anniversary of the 1967 Six Day War.

Times reporter John L. Hess said the feeling of most Jews here is that they will eventually leave Paris for Israel. He wrote that most of the younger Jews want to go now but their parents are afraid of the war and in many instances refuse to sign exit papers.

Most Tunisian Jews emigrated here in 1950 after Israel became a state. Large waves of immigrants came again in the mid-1950s and again in 1967.

The Zeidman Conversion - What Did It Solve?

JERUSALEM — Whether the quickie Orthodox conversion of Mrs. Helen Zeidman lit new fires in the dispute over rabbinical control of marriage and personal laws in Israel remained to be seen. One fact is beyond question and that is that the conversion performed by Chief Army Chaplain and Chief Rabbi-elect of Tel Aviv Shlomo Goren has split the Orthodox camp.

The fight which threatened to break wide open and take Golda Meir's Coalition Government with it was averted by the narrowest margins.

AS IT IS, EVERYTHING is back where it was before the Zeidman case. She had been converted to Judaism by three Israeli Reform rabbis who followed every particular of Orthodox conversion. The act brought Reform into conflict once again with the Orthodox who only recently had accepted a decision which meant that those converted by Reform

Intellectuals Fight Back

JERUSALEM — Intellectuals who resent the hold the Orthodox enforce over civil legislation are asking the courts to remove the designation from their identity cards which connect them in any way with the Orthodox.

Four Tel Aviv-area Israelis have asked the Israeli High Court to rule that the designation, "le'om," be removed from their cards. Musician Ziggy Stedermann, journalist Ran Kislev, and artists Levana and Moshe Gershoni told the court that the designation, which means peoplehood, has racist and religious connotations with which they do not agree.

Prof. Rafael Tamarin has entered a suit of his own with the Tel Aviv District Court asking for a declaratory judgement that he is an Israeli and not a Jew. He contended that his registry as a Jewish national violates his civil rights and constitutes religious compulsion.

rabbis outside of Israel would be considered as Jews. The paradox was not lost on Israelis most of whom are non-religious.

The conversion of Mrs. Zeidman and her two children was carried out in a rush procedure the day before by a Rabbinical Court composed of the Chief Chaplain, Rabbi Shlomo Goren, and two other military chaplains.

Mrs. Zeidman, 37, was born in Bethesda, Md., as Helen McHenry-Shannon, and was a member of her parents'

Unitarian Church. The Zeidmans have three children, a boy, Yehuda, and two daughters, one three-month-old Rachel, who still remains to be converted as she was ill when her mother and brother and sister were converted.

MRS. ZEIDMAN came to Israel in 1964 and settled in Nahal Oz. She and her husband were married by Mexican proxy in 1967. She subsequently underwent a Reform conversion in Israel and she and her husband were married in a Reform ceremony, after which she applied to the Population Registrar in Ashkelon to register her as Jewish. When he failed to do so, she went to the High Court.

Binyamin Zeidman is a graduate engineer. Contacted by phone, he said only that he felt "a lot better now that the whole thing is over."

Meanwhile it was reported that a group of Orthodox rabbis from various towns throughout the country intend to appeal to the Rabbinical High Court to revoke the conversion.

FROM THE OPPOSITE side, Member of the Knesset Shalom Cohen, M.K. (Ha'Olam Haze), has asked the Rabbinical High Court of Appeals to annul the conversion, claiming it was part of a political machination.

In his plea, Mr. Cohen stated that the speedy conversion was not carried out for religious considerations but political ones — to make it possible for the National Religious Party (NRP) to remain in the Government despite a prohibition by the Chief Rabbinate. He claimed that Mrs. Zeidman was no more Jewish now than she was after being converted by a Reform rabbi, and that this sort of conversion for expediency discriminated against others who wish to convert to Judaism and who are forced to go through much more rigorous procedures.

"The highest degree of charity is to aid a man in want by offering him a gift or a loan, by entering into partnership with him, or by providing work for him, so that he may become self-supporting." — Maimonides.

Now Educate Parents Delegates Are Urged

NEW YORK — The feature of the recent convention of the American Association for Jewish Education was the straight talk, and not the euphemisms which usually pervade national Jewish gatherings.

The strongest recommendation was for compulsory parent education programs.

"As of now, after two or three years in a Jewish school, the child knows more than his parent," Henry Margolis told the delegates. "He can come home from public school and get answers to his questions, but he can't come home from the Jewish school and get them," he continued.

"It does not take long for the youngster to see that he is the only one who learns anything Jewish. A child has a different attitude when he knows his parents are involved."

Newly-elected vice president William Goldfarb asserted that "part of the problem is that we have never created an indigenous culture."

Keynote speaker Philip Klutznick also did not mince words.

He called for consideration alongside support for the Jewish state, support for the state of the Jew. He asked that we save and secure Jerusalem where many Jews live but also save and secure Jerusalem which lives in the hearts of thousands of Jews all over the world.

Commenting on the younger generation, Mr. Klutznick said, "This is a put-up or shut-up generation. They want to know if there is something universal which demands Jewish survival."

Jewish Society Receives Grant

CLEVELAND — A grant from the Jewish Community Federation of Cleveland will enable the American Jewish Historical Society to assemble and catalog a pictorial collection of sites, buildings and persons relating to the history of the Jews in America.

When completed, it will constitute the only archive of its kind.

Abortive Hijacking Ends Jews' Flight From USSR

MOSCOW — The world got another message from Jews that they were being discriminated against when news was learned here of the arrest of twenty persons, mostly Jews involved in the attempt to seize a Soviet airliner which would carry them to freedom and eventually to Israel.

Western correspondents here learned of the rumored arrests and were able to piece together the details.

The abortive hijacking attempt took place at the airport at Leningrad. Twelve persons, including some Jews, were nabbed as officials detected firearms in their possession as they were boarding the aircraft. The arrests led to searches in Leningrad and the arrest of eight more Jews.

The plane was on a flight to Petrozavodsk on the Finnish border.

Trees Memorial For Kent U. Girl

YOUNGSTOWN, O. — A grove of 2,500 trees will be planted in Israel in memory of Sandra Scheuer, one of the three Jewish students who were slain by the National Guard in the shooting which took four lives and injured 11 persons at the Kent campus.

The announcement in the bulletin of Ohev Tzedek Temple here said the Jewish National Fund would plant the grove and listed a number of contributions already received for the Memorial.

NAMES IN THE NEWS

Youngest Board Member Only 16

The move to elect more young people to boards of directors of Jewish organizations got its biggest push when 16-year-old Ellen Levy, of St. Paul, was named to the board of the St. Paul Talmud Torah. The unusual honor came to the rising high school senior when she and five of her classmates were asked to air their views on the school's teaching methods at the annual meeting of the institution, according to the American Jewish World.

Talent and Courage

Hanna Meron, Israel's leading actress, knew how to put it just right when she was welcomed back to Israel at a meeting of the Editor's Committee. Although her leg had been amputated to save her life after the attack by Arab terrorists on the El Al passengers at Munich, the stage and screen star walked up the first floor of Beit Sokolov unattended. "The words 'thank you,'" she said, "are not enough to express my feelings for all the sympathy and support I received from Israel, as expressed in hundreds of letters from all kinds of people whom I had never met. It was a strange feeling to be regarded as a symbol, as many people put it. I simply wanted to continue to live and did all in my power to survive, and the proof is that I am here today."

Convert-To-Be Learns Fast

Asked why he was still a bachelor, Specialist 5 Larry De Cocq, of Joplin, Mo., showed that although he was soon to be a convert to Judaism it didn't take him very long to learn about one Jewish practice. On leave from his post in Vietnam, he responded that "I haven't been hard pressed lately. There aren't many Jewish mothers in Vietnam." The army explosives disposal expert was interviewed in The Kansas City Jewish Chronicle and related that he had been studying Judaism with army chaplains as well as with Rabbi Maurice D. Solomon, of Kansas City, whose house guest he was. In order to get a chance to visit Israel where he spent a month, De Cocq signed up for an additional six-months service in Vietnam, after which he will return to complete his college work in the United States in preparation for aliyah to Israel.

Two Trumps

Bella Abzug who hopes to unseat Representative Leonard Farberstein in the 19th Congressional District of Manhattan has two trump cards. One is her fluency in Yiddish and the other is Barbra Streisand who is actively politicking for her. "I have been silent too long about the chaotic state of our country," Miss Streisand said in explaining her stand to crowds of prospective voters ranging from 300 to 500. The actress then went into Mrs. Abzug's philosophy for rent control and against war, unemployment and narcotics addiction.

Bureaucracy Can Be Understanding

Lod Airport officials pitched in to help cupid when Gloria Stewart, the British citizen who had been broadcasting for Arab TV before the Six Day War and who shifted to Israeli radio and TV since, and Adi Sofer, who also works for Israel TV, were ready to fly to Cyprus so they could get married. Sofer is a Jew and intermarriage is not permitted in Israel which has no civil marriage provisions at all. Gloria had failed to secure an exit visa, so she was stopped at customs, but noting the way her face fell when she was advised of her mistake, officials contacted the Interior Ministry in Jerusalem who gave permission for her to fly to Cyprus with her fiancé.

Judge Is Too Liberal

Superior Judge Jerry Pacht who ruled that the University of Los Angeles' board of regents policy against hiring Communists was unconstitutional is involved in a recall petition. The son of former Superior Court Judge Isaac Pacht, prominent leader in the Jewish community, Judge Pacht, of strong liberal leanings, is being challenged along with Judge Robert W. Kenny, who had been originally assigned the issue of Communists on faculties of state universities, but had been challenged. Judge Pacht has asked the California Supreme Court to invalidate the recall petition on the grounds that it does not carry the 20 per cent of the signatures as required by law. The UCLA board of regents has since ruled against rehiring Angela Davis, acting professor of philosophy at the school and an admitted Communist party member.

Happy Anniversary

The founder of the Big Brother Movement, Irvin Wertheimer, and his wife, Duffie, celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary with a gift of antique candlesticks to Wise Temple in Cincinnati. Mr. Wertheimer, at 90, still makes a daily visit to the nationwide brokerage firm under his name. He said he got the idea for the Big Brother movement in 1903 while seeing a boy root through a garbage can in an alley behind his office. Mrs. Wertheimer's father, Edward L. Heinsheimer, was chairman of the board of Hebrew Union College during the first World War years.

Sermon Of The Week

Israel In Dependence — Rabbi M. Robert Syme, Temple Israel, Hartford, Conn.

Quotation Of The Week

On Wednesdays, it is my pleasure to have lunch with a group of interested gentlemen of all ages who constitute the Men's Club Bible Discussion Group. This year, our topic of discussion has been the Prophet Amos and we have worked our way line by line through about half of his book. We have found that Amos addressed himself mainly to the evil social conditions of his day and what could and should be done to correct or improve them. A few weeks ago one of our regular attenders asked what the ideas of Amos really had to do with Judaism. The prophet speaks of improving relationships among people, of curing the ills of society, of establishing justice and so on. Yet to judge from the program of Beth El, Judaism consists of ritual practices, a modicum of education for children and little else. Beth El has a Ritual Committee, and a Board of (Children's) Education, but no committee or formal apparatus to deal with social concerns, or keep the congregation informed of pressing community problems, or raise the level of participation in the UJF drive or even provide adult education. Apparently, either Amos or Congregation Beth El has the wrong idea of what Judaism is about. What do you think? — Rabbi Marim D. Charry, Congregation Beth El, Norfolk, Va.

Israeli Hopetuls To Play In U.S.

NEW YORK — A contingent of eight young Israeli tennis players is expected shortly in New York where under the tutelage and hospitality of Columbia University the court stars will train and compete in tournaments.

The Jewish youngsters will have the advantage of coaching by George Seewager, Jr., Columbia's amazingly successful first year coach, plus by such Jewish notables as Dick Savitt, the Jewish Wimbledon and Davis Cup ace.

Sponsoring the visit is the American Committee for Sports for Israel.

The tournaments in which the Israelis are scheduled to participate include the national clay-court juniors at Louisville, the North Atlantic championships beginning Monday at Baker Field Courts and the Eastern juniors at Forest Hills.

The Return To Ritual

Whether or not a Reform rabbi wears a robe and a yarmulke may not at first seem to be anything too much more than an idiosyncrasy. Consequently not too much attention has been paid to this growing movement, and its underlying importance has largely been ignored.

In announcing his decision to doff the robe, which he called a Protestant tradition, and to don the kippah, Rabbi Simon J. Maslin of Chicago's KAM Temple, reported that many of the Reform students at the Hebrew Union College — Jewish Institute of Religion were wearing kippot nowadays. Previously in this paper, the number of students at the Cincinnati seminary who were eating at the strictly kosher table was reported as growing by leaps and bounds.

The tendency is now a trend, and it requires no prophet to prognosticate that given another decade or two the declaration of independence being made by our young rabbis, those in the seminary and those in pulpit, will have won the day for a return to more ritual and greater observance of tradition.

For those who might contend that wearing or not of a robe or a yarmulke, and the few students who prefer not to break with the habits they were accustomed to in their homes of eating kosher food are only surface manifestations with no substantial content or meaning, let it not be forgotten that dispensing with ritual initiated flight from Judaism. Return to ritual can signal the return to Judaism.

Eliezer Is Assaulted

There is no excuse for the treatment by Israeli officials of Eliezer. He is probably one of the best known American Jews, and for him to have been assaulted in Israel is an offense that is compounded in any number of directions — stupidity, police brutality, Mayor Kollek's indifference and a police-state complex among bureaucracy.

The fact that Eliezer is unknown in Israel cannot be accepted as an alibi. He is the most harmless person in the world, and he is also the most dedicated.

In the United States he suffered indignities because the Jews took offense at someone in less than proper attire who told them off. It was the Jews, in some cases rabbis, who called in the police. The police, although he may have been manhandled by them as they jostled him into a patrol wagon, sympathized with him.

In Israel, the populace did not find him offensive. It was officialdom which has persecuted him. That he was struck in the face is utterly indefensible. Mayor Kollek, if he is of the calibre that we have known him heretofore, will tender him an official apology and thus establish once and for all free speech — even for those who some will compare with the Prophets.

Hadassah Urged Launch Day School,

HARTFORD — A call to but asserted that the whole Hadassah to launch a pilot day school which would be the forerunner of a national program was made here by Rabbi Howard D. Singer to the opening banquet of the Connecticut Region of Hadassah. According to The Connecticut Jewish Ledger, Rabbi Singer praised the public school system slant of today's public education does not give Jewish children the feeling they need to have. "In colleges," he went on, "it is the Day School graduates who walk out on anti-Semitic speakers and anti-Israel radicals, while other Jewish students do not feel committed enough to follow them."

The EDITOR'S CHAIR

The most exciting book I've read in the last ten years — probably longer — is "The Pledge" by Leonard Slater. It's so exciting that I could not lay it down, and although the fact that we were on the periphery of the movement the book describes may add somewhat to our interest, we think the book will have a catalytic effect on the Jewish community. It should be mailed free by the tens of thousands of Jewish leaders throughout America because its message is that what we are doing is piddling to what was being done by American Jews in the several years prior to the establishment of the State.

The characters are our friends, but they are not the organizational Jews. Ben Gurion in his search for weapons with which to fight the war he knew was coming avoided the organized Jewish leadership for the same reason anyone else with any good sense would — they would not perform, they would engage in petty bickering and they actually would be impediments.

The book names names, and the star is Rudolph Sonneborn, who though today is finally just recuperating from a stroke that almost felled him three or four years ago is still the crusading leader to whom we all owe a debt, and to whom Ben Gurion went when he needed to set up this grand network which provided Israel with the guns, planes and ships that finally stemmed the Arab advance into Israel in 1948.

It's a fascinating account. Our Jean Herschaft interviewed Slater, but it seemed to us too much like the kind of managed interviews by publishers who seek to publicize a new book, so we rejected it. Then of course M.Z. Frank has written about it in his column, so we felt that we had done our share.

We didn't get to the book that quickly because, although the review copy reached us, when we took it home, it was loaned out to someone visiting the house before we could open it.

When we finally got around to starting it, we couldn't lay it down, and were reading it on the bus to work, while we grabbed a bite of lunch, etc. Now we are about one-third of the way through it. At the moment it's in the hands of Ben Prince, who is laid up for a few days, and who is so enamored with Israel that we've grown to hate his Friday calls challenging, disputing, berating because there isn't enough news of Israel in that week's issue of The P.O.

Although we haven't concluded it, we want to alert you to buy your copy and read it. We were on the periphery of the movement, one aspect of this whole underground effort in behalf of Israel, through what was called Land and Labor, and the contact we had was with Rabbi Abraham Klausner. We asked Abe to review the book for us before we had opened it, but he declined on the basis that he was too close to the network operation to review it dispassionately.

This is like reading a spy thriller, but more exciting and dramatic in that the cast of characters are people we all know and whose willingness to sacrifice their own reputations and even careers gives the lie to the suave, urbane, sophisticated men like Harry Levine or Rudy Sonneborn or Henry Montor, etc.

One thing surprised us. When it seemed the FBI was breathing down the neck of the operation, the decision was made to go directly to J. Edgar Hoover. He listened, he made no commitment, but he did not kill the program as well he could have.

How extensive this operation was the book now reveals. We and our readers must have glimpsed what was involved only from the Hank Greenspun episode. He was convicted in federal court and given a suspended sentence because of his involvement with a boat that was loaded to the gunwales with arms that somehow was discovered in a Mexican harbor. Our clip morgue shows two items on Greenspun, whose first name is Herman, but whom everyone in Las Vegas knows as Hank. He now publishes the Las Vegas Sun, a daily paper, and is most successful.

The first is from Jerusalem and tells how he finally met those in Israel for whom he was a gun runner, for which he had been fined $10,000 for violating the U.S. Neutrality Act. Incidentally he later was pardoned and his citizenship, which had been revoked, restored. In this item dated Sept. 14, 1956 he stated that he took the rap on the charge in order to shield others.

The second item in our morgue is dated two years later, 1958 — March 28 to be exact — and relates that Hank lost his fifth appeal for a restoration of his civil rights growing out of the gun-running episode.

Parents Hypocritical On Return To Judaism Plea

By MIKE MASCH

The present American Jewish community — more specifically, the adult Jewish community — has defined its politics, its cultural likes and dislikes and its social standards as inherently and exclusively Jewish. That is to say, Jewish values are taken to be synonymous with the values of the American middle class. That is certainly a broad generalization, but I think you will find that (generally) it is true.

What is tragic about this state of affairs is that it has led many Jewish young people whose politics and social and cultural preferences are different from those of their parents to arrive at the conclusion that, in order to live the kind of life that is meaningful and satisfying and worthwhile to them, one of the things they have to give up is their Judaism, which is inextricably tied to the "older order."

It must be admitted that the adult Jewish community has done little to try to convince its young people that this is not necessarily so. In fact, the opposite is closer to the truth.

Adult Jews do not want to admit that there is and always has been an inherent dynamic for change and evolution in Judaism. Even more so, they do not want to admit that there is no way to reverse the tide of change that is sweeping over young America, Jewish and non-Jewish. And most of all, they do not want to admit that all this change signifies anything good. They do not want to grant that there might be any validity to the multi-faceted challenge being made by this younger generation to virtually every institution that this older generation has defended so staunchly all these years.

"And the Lord spoke unto Moses, saying: 'Send thou men, that they may spy out the Land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Israel; of every tribe of their fathers shall ye send a man, every one a prince among them.'" (Numbers 13:1).

By ZALMAN HILSENRAD

Twelve spies were sent to observe the Land militarily and its inhabitants. Ten joined in a demoralizing majority report that flatly rejected the possibility of conquest.

How could such prominent men stumble into the unforgivable sin of discouraging the Children of Israel from continuing to the Promised Land, when it was against the expressed will of the Almighty?

Our Sages state the cause was envy. They saw prophetically that they were destined to lose their positions as princes upon the arrival in the Holy Land.

Here then is the paradox: if they merited the spirit of prophecy, whose many prerequisites include a spirit purified and cleansed of earthly weaknesses, how could they still be motivated by envy, one of the crudest of human vices?

We must therefore conclude that human vices are so deeply ingrained that even after being thoroughly cleansed, tiny roots still remain . . . and Satan waits patiently for the opportune moment to water and develop these poisonous roots until they blossom into venomous fruits . . . and these befuddle our senses and we rush heedlessly into rash acts with dire consequences . . . not only to us, but to our people as well.

No person can therefore ever feel that he has completely demolished his evil instincts, so he must be consistently alert

Minsk And Pinsk Not Same, Both Important

By M. Z. FRANK

WHEN I FIND A MISPRINT or a slip in grammar or syntax in my published stuff, I like to think it was the fault of the editor or printer. Thus, in my column of June 5, Leonard Slater, author of "The Pledge" appears as "Robert Slater." There was no reason why I should have typed "Robert" when I had the book in front of me. It must have been the printer. Of course, he had no reason for it either. But printers are that way.

Frank

In my lengthy review of several books in "Hadoar," I mentioned the book of the Labor Zionist movement (in Yiddish) by N. Kantorowicz, saying he was "a Litvak from the Province of Minsk" writing about Polish Jewry. (Incidentally, in his book Kantorowicz reports that at one time Mr. Zalman Shazar, then known as Zalman Rubashov, also a Litvak from the Province of Minsk, was brought from Tel Aviv for a short time to start a daily Yiddish paper). The published article read in part "a Litvak from the Province of Pinsk." I couldn't possibly have made that blunder. Pinsk is a town in the Province of Minsk. Minsk and Pinsk ought not to be confused with Dvinsk. Minsk and Pinsk are in White Russia. Dvinsk is in neighboring Latvia. Pinsk lies on the river Pina. Dvinsk on the Dvina. But Minsk does not lie on any Mina. Neither is Minsk in Poland, as Alfred Kazin says in his autobiographical book "A Walker in the Streets."

Minsk is the capital of White Russia, which includes the provinces of Minsk, Homel (formerly Mohilev) and Vitebsk. From Vitebsk came Marc Chagall. From the province of Mohilev (now Homel) the ancestors of the Lubavitcher Rebbe. From the province of Minsk, the first President of Israel, Chaim Weizmann and the third President Zalman Shazar. The author of the book in question, Kantorowicz, like the later Paula Ben-Gurion, was born in the city of Minsk.

A HUNDRED YEARS ago the first periodicals in square letters appeared in America. Most of them were in Yiddish and there was a period of years when the Yiddish press flourished in this country to the tune of half a million regular readers. There were always also a few periodicals in Hebrew, published and read by handfuls of devotees.

In 1911 a Hebrew weekly edited by Reuben Brainin, called "Haderor" ("The Swallow") was published in New York and was read all over the world. At least I read it in Russia. But that weekly did not last long. When I arrived in Montreal in 1913, I found a daily in Hebrew called "Hayom" ("The Day") published in New York, displayed in Jewish bookshops. It too did not last. There was a monthly publication called "Hatoren" ("The Mast"). Finally, several circles of Hebraists banded themselves together and formed what we may call a Hebrew Federation called "Histadruth Ivrit of America" — not to be confused with the Israel Labor Federation by a similar appellation. The Histadruth Ivrit undertook to publish a Hebrew daily called "Hadoar" ("The Mail"). That was over fifty years ago.

TODAY, THE HISTADRUTH IVRITH is still here and so is "Hadoar." But there have been some changes.

The daily "Hadoar" was soon converted into a weekly and, as such, has had an uninterrupted life of half a century. Preparations for the fiftieth anniversary celebration of "Hadoar" are under way. It is the only Hebrew weekly outside of Israel and the oldest of them all. (Until a few weeks ago, "Hapoel Hatzair" in Tel Aviv, was older, but the Israel Labor party, which published it, decided to suspend publication for reasons of economy.

The daily "Hadoar" had an editorial board of three, but when it became a weekly, the late Menahem Ribalow became its editor. He really carried the weekly on his shoulders and shaped its literary and journalistic character. The literary standard was of a very high order. Ribalow was also Secretary General of the Histadruth Ivrit of America, which sponsored other Hebrew publications, such as the American Hebrew Yearbook and other activities in behalf of Hebrew.

After Ribalow's death, his assistant, Moshe Maisels took over the editorship. After Maisels settled in Jerusalem, Moshe Yinnon took over and edited the weekly until his recent retirement. Now Itzhak Ivry is the editor.

After the death of Ribalow, who controlled both the weekly and the organization which sponsored it, the Histadruth Ivrit and "Hadoar" separated to be reunited only recently. Both are now located in the same building (120 West Sixteenth St.) and if you phone 924-8650, you will hear a voice saying "Histadruth Ivrit-Hadoar." The business manager of "Hadoar," David Epstein, is now also the director of "Histadruth Ivrit of America."

For the past eight years, the Histadruth Ivrit of America has been publishing a monthly in easy Hebrew for adults called "Lamishpaha."

Unlike "Hadoar," the monthly publication (the name means "For the Family") is printed with vowels and is richly illustrated.

"HADOAR" AND "LAMISHPAHA" are not the only Hebrew publications in America. There is the monthly "Bitzaron" ("Fort" or "Fortress") founded about thirty years ago by the late Professor Tchernowitz and now carried on by his son Maurice Chernowitz as executive editor with Hayim Leaf as associate editor (Editorial Board Nahum Glatzer, Harry Wolfson, Simon Halkin) and a monthly magazine for juveniles published by Asher Wolk called "Olam Hadash" ("New World") — and some I may have missed.

To do justice to "Hadoar" I shall have to discuss some of the interesting contributions within the past year or so (that is, those I hope to make interesting to my readers). Just now let me pick out one — a story about an Israeli writer who calls himself Ever Hadani and whom I ran into in the "Hadoar" offices the other day.

The real name of Ever Hadani is — or used to be — Aharon Feldman. He grew up in the town of Pinsk in Western White Russia where Chaim Weizmann grew up and learned Hebrew from the same teacher as Weizmann. (Incidentally, the story is told in "Hadoar" by Zevulun Ravid, who also comes from those parts).

At an early age, he left Pinsk for Palestine where he attended the then only Hebrew high school in the world. As a writer he became the chronicler of the pioneer endeavor of the years before, during and following World War I.

Ever Hadani belongs to that first generation of Zionist pioneer writers who left the school for work in the field, then went to study agriculture (in his case, in Holland), next began writing on agricultural problems — teaching Jewish pioneers who lacked farming experience and lacked even more familiarity with the soil of the Homeland. In time he began writing sagas of the early pioneers. The first of those is called "The Wooden Shack" and tells the story of the earliest kibbutz, Deganiah. His collected works consist of seven volumes (in Hebrew). They contain novels, some based on actual life, others utopian, essays, short stories.

During World War I, Ever Hadani served in the Jewish Legion (part of which was recruited in Palestine).

As far as I know, Ever Hadani's "Wooden Shack" is the first attempt to treat kibbutz life in fiction. The next one appeared years later. Today there is a whole literature about kibbutz life.

Million Is Lopped Off

Population Not 13.5M.

LONDON — The view that the 13.5 million usually given as the Jewish population of the world is exaggerated was expressed by two demographic experts with the Institute of Contemporary Jewry at the Hebrew University. A study by Uziel O. Schmeltz and Paul Glikson published here claims that the number of Jews in the world is declining.

Citing factors of the loss of young adults caused by the extermination of six million Jews by the Nazis, the low birth rate in Jewish families and an increasing proportion of marriages to non-Jews, the pair estimate the figure at closer to 12.5 million.

THE FIGURE used for the United States is only five million as against the 5.5 million usually used by American sources. Figures for other countries are 2.5 million for Israel and Russia; 400,000 to 500,000 for France, Argentina and Britain; Canada 250,000; and Brazil, South Africa and Rumania 100,000 to 150,000 each.

In the United States, the study found, the growth rate of the Jewish population ranks low among the major religious groups. The fertility of Jewish women, the book says, is more than 20 per cent below the urban American population, more than a quarter below the entire white population and almost 30 per cent lower than the national level.

Parents Hypocritical On Return

to the ever-present danger. All too often, parents who say they wish their kids would "come back to Judaism" could not, in fact, care less about Judaism. What they really want is that their kids should cut their hair, stop listening to that slop music and wearing those stupid clothes, and stop getting involved in all those "Communist" political movements. If they really wanted their kids to be more Jewish, then they would recognize that a lot of what their sons and daughters are doing, especially in their commitment to making

Jews, the study says, make more efficient use of birth control and usually favor smaller families.

Even in Israel, where a baby boom among the Jewish population for Europe developed around 1950, there has been a decline in the birth rate.

better world to live in, is very much within the Jewish tradition. But the parents don't know that, or they refuse to admit it, and so the kids are convinced that acting out of moral commitment is antithetical to Judaism.

And if parents really wanted their kids to be more Jewish, then they would have raised them in homes where both Jewish practices and Jewish values were very much a part of the environment. But they didn't and so the kids are convinced that there is little more to Judaism

Fourth Fire In Boston Hits Synagogue Again

By PAUL KAHN

BOSTON (P-O) — Fire for the second time within a month struck at Congregation Agudath Israel in the Dorchester section, again forcing religious services to be cancelled.

The blaze, which occurred last Friday evening is the fourth within as many weeks to damage synagogues in the Dorchester area. Starting in the back yard of the synagogue, the fire spread to the Hebrew school classroom which was being used temporarily as a sanctuary since the first blaze on May 27 which caused an estimated $10,000 damage.

THAT SAME DAY, a Torah in a nearby synagogue, Chevra Shaas, was destroyed by a deliberately set fire. Several days later flames tore through premises belonging to Congregation Chai Odom doing thousands of dollars worth of damage.

Friday's blaze was discovered by Hyman Stilman, sexton of Agudath Israel. He was sitting in the classroom preparing for services when he heard youthful voices in the back yard. "I saw a tremendous brush fire," he said, "and I saw a tremendous brush fire." The fire burst through the windows into the classroom destroying several taleisim.

RABBI ISRAEL L. Goldberg, Spiritual leader of Agudath Israel, said the Civil Rights Commission of the mayor's office is attempting to organize a civilian patrol has come from the Patrolman's Association and the NAACP.

The Jewish Advocate here reported that the Jewish Community Council of Metropolitan Boston here met with Mayor Kevin H. White, urging him to step up efforts to obtain nearly $200,000 from the federal government under provisions in the Safe Streets Act.

Mayor White told the council that possibilities of establishing a police-civilian patrol force for the troubled area were being explored.

Boston police have provided worshippers extra protection lately, especially during Shavuot and have assured leaders of the community that every effort is being made to (Continued on Next Page)

Defense League Head Invited To Pulpit Also

By MYRON SCHOEN

In last week's column I reported on the appearance of Rabbi A. Bruce Goldman, leader of the city. This week I write about another guest in the pulpit of Rabbi Edward E. Klein.

The latest speaker was Rabbi Meir Kahane, national director of the Jewish Defense League, who asked that he be afforded the same privilege. Without hesitation, Rabbi Klein dispatched the invitation on the proviso that the same limitations of time and the absence of demonstrations before, during and after the worship service, be observed by the leader of the JDL and his followers.

As the previous week, the chapel of the Free Synagogue was almost filled at the very start of the early Sabbath worship service, although there had been no releases sent to the media by the synagogue. Nor were there any representatives of the TV and radio present. A single policeman, always present when Friday services are held, was at the door.

If there was any discernable difference it was the dozen or more college-aged youngsters who accompanied Rabbi Goldman. There were only a few more yarmulkes than usual at this Reform service.

RABBI KAHANE'S appearance in the pulpit of the Free Synagogue was a bit different in one aspect — his mode of dress. Tieless, shirt open at the neck, and collar draped over his suit jacket, he affectuates the appearance of the young Israeli, and his broad frame and muscular demeanor gives one a feeling of strength and power.

However, his tone and his remarks, while forthright, were not strident or demanding. He challenged Rabbi Goldman's "manifesto" and demand for "reparations" from the synagogues. Having been present to hear Rabbi Goldman the week before, I found this confusing, for Rabbi Goldman did not, as reported in some journals, read the so-called "manifesto" nor did he make any demands for funds.

The JDL leader equated the appearance of Rabbi Goldman with a bid for the support of the Black Panthers and proceeded to display and quote from several of their publications which contained obvious anti-Semitic references.

HE QUESTIONED how any leader of the Jewish community could align himself in any way with this militant group. His main thesis was the failure of the American Jewish community and its organized bodies to be concerned with the problems of Jews as Jews. He emphasized the disparity with our all-out support for the beleaguered Jews who live in Israel and our abandonment of the poor and middle income Jews who work or reside in or adjacent to the black ghettos of urban centers.

At the same time, Rabbi Kahane chided the established Jewish organizations, local and national, for their failure to adequately support a meaningful program of Jewish education which would tie our youngsters to the Jewish people. He cautioned that the Jew in America must not trod the same path which lead to their slaughter in Europe during World War II and that we must be strong and resist those who would humble us. But he did not go into specifics as to how these programs should be carried out.

TOO BAD that both appearances, that of Rabbi Goldman and Rabbi Kahane, were at early vesper services, as they are called at the Free Synagogue. Had they taken place at a regular, late evening service, both men could have had the opportunity to stand before a larger audience and participate in an Oneg Shabbat discussion which could have amplified their different views, for the benefit of the congregation and community.

It is interesting to note that the opinions expressed by the leaders of the JDL and the Radical Student Union have a striking parallel on the current political scene. They represent two diametrically opposed conclusions concerning the problems of the Jewish community and offer opposite solutions.

However, they were speaking to the right audience, for the organized synagogues, such as the Free Synagogue, approximate the "establishment" in American Jewish life and might be termed the "great, silent majority."

Which message will they harken to?

Fourth Fire In Boston

POLICE SAY THE last blaze was set by children, implying it was an accident. But Rabbi Goldberg said he is not completely convinced of this. He recalls a brush fire set in the back yard a year and a half ago.

The congregation is planning to stay and rebuild the synagogue. Estimates were placed at $15,000 to make the structure useable and $40,000 to completely repair the building.

"We won't be frightened away," the Rabbi warned. "We are determined to have the Shul ready for the High Holydays."

The Digest Of The Yiddish Press

Great Scholarly Work

By RABBI SAMUEL SILVER

The most significant scholarly Jewish production of modern times will appear in 1971.

Silver

It will be the 15-volume Encyclopedia Judaica, in English, which will encompass all Jewish knowledge. The monumental creation was aided by a million-dollar loan from the American government through the Agency of International Development. That loan was granted in 1961. More millions are being raised by a committee headed by Arthur Goldberg, Nahum Goldmann (whose salary from 1926 to 1933 was paid by an aborted agency seeking to put out an encyclopedia in Europe), and Joseph Schwartz, head of Israel bonds.

Acting director of the project is Dr. Frederick Lachman, a German refugee who did a stint as professor of Biblical archaeology at Hebrew University in Jerusalem before coming to the United States for the new undertaking. Asher Penn, of the Forward, went over to Dr. Lachman's office at 104 E. 40th St., in Manhattan to get some details.

He learned that over 500 scholars are at work on the endeavor, that some five million dollars will be needed, that the group hopes to make the encyclopedia a commercial success, that the encyclopedia has another headquarters in Jerusalem, that behind-the-Curtain savants have been most cooperative, and that the encyclopedia will give ample coverage to the Yiddish press, including the Forward.

Chief editor is Dr. Cecil Roth (his death is announced elsewhere in this issue) and other scholars at the helm of the organization are Geoffrey Wigoder, of Israel, Prof. Salo Baron, and Prof. Chaim Rabin, of Hebrew U.

The Israeli outlet for the encyclopedia will be the Israeli Program for Scientific Translations, which, despite Mideast strife, has turned out hundreds of important volumes, including many ordered by the U.S. Government.

Penn tells his readers that the 10-volume Jewish Encyclopedia, produced in 1900, and published by Funk & Wagnalls with monies provided by Schiffs, Warburgs, and Lehman's, is still the greatest of its kind. Another set of books, the Universal Jewish Encyclopedia, published in ten volumes in 1939, was also a fine compendium of Jewish information, but it was not quite up to the level of its predecessor.

Penn also outlines an effort to put out a large encyclopedia in Yiddish. It was to include not only Judaica, but everything. It was begun in the 30's and four volumes were actually completed, but they got no further than the A's.

Initiated in Europe with a Dubnov Fund, the project was transferred to New York after Hitler and it was decided to limit it to Jewish topics. Leading the endeavor were Raphael Abramowitz, Abraham Meness, Samuel Niger, Dr. Mark Vishnitzer, A. Keane, Dr. Israel Knox, Eva Yehoash-Dworkin, Samuel Galinsky, and I. Leschtinsky. The group eked out a total of seven volumes, four in English, but the project was buried in 1968.

Your Name

By NORBERT PEARLROTH

Dear Mr. Pearlroth: I am interested in knowing the meaning of my family name: IMBER. My paternal grandfather comes from Lomza, Poland. Cordially yours, Errol Imber, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Pearlroth

Imber is a Polish word meaning "Ginger" a pungent and aromatic root which is used both in medicine and cookery. Its Yiddish name is Ingber. As a family name it is derived from an ancestor who was in the grocery business and took his cue from his most valuable stock in trade. The most celebrated bearer of this name was Naftali Herz Imber, author of the words of "Hatikva" now the Israeli National Anthem. Israel Zangwill immortalized him as the poet Melchitzedek in "The Children of the Ghetto."

Dear Mr. Pearlroth: Could you please inform me of the origin of my family name STAMPFER. My great-great grandfather is supposed to have come from Hungary, near Budapest. Thank you very much. Shaul Stampfer, New York City.

Stampfer is a family name of geographical origin. Its source is the town of Stampfen, located near Pressburg, Slovakia. Its Slovakian name is Stupava, while the Hungarians referred to it as Stomfa. It was part of Hungary till 1913 but is now in Czechoslovakia. There is no doubt that your family originated there.

WHAT FOODS THESE MORSELS BE

Subtlety The Secret When Preparing Salads

By SARAH LIEBER

Summertime is salad time, of course. Although the usual combination of tomatoes, cucumbers, scalions and lettuce are always welcome when fresh vegetables are available, we like to vary the menu with unusual combinations. One of the most attractive ways to enhance salad is with a sprinkling of fresh herbs. If you have a sunny window, or a place in the back yard to grow your own, you will find it most rewarding.

Of course there are times when the green grocer or supermarket has good supplies of fresh dill, chives, parsley and sometimes basil. Remember when using minced fresh herbs you may need more than with the usual dried variety. Subtlety is the secret, so taste and add as desired.

FRUIT SALAD WITH MINT DRESSING

3 large ripe bananas
¼ cup lemon juice
12 preserved kumquats
1 orange, thinly sliced
mixed salad greens, shredded

Dressing:

¾ cup oil
2 tbsps. vinegar
2 tbsps. syrup from preserved kumquats

1 tsp. powdered mustard
1 tsp. salt
1 tsp. chopped fresh mint or ½ tsp. dried
1 tsp. chopped or minced parsley

Peel and slice bananas and place in a shallow dish or pie pan. Pour lemon juice over the slices, and turn them to allow juice to reach all sides. This prevents darkening. Cut kumquats into slices. Arrange bananas, kumquats, and orange slices on greens. Prepare dressing by blending all ingredients and pour over fruit and greens. Garnish with whole mint leaves, if desired. Serves 6.

CITRUS SALAD WITH CURRY DRESSING

1 large grapefruit or 1 can, drained sections
2 oranges
2 cups pitted fresh or canned cherries
watercress or chicory

Dressing:

1½ cups sour cream
1 tsp. grated onion
½ tsp. curry powder
½ tsp. salt

Section grapefruit or use canned sections. Slice oranges. Arrange fruit on individual salad plates or in shallow glass bowl. Garnish with watercress or chicory. Pass dressing which is made by blending all ingredients. Chill before using. Serves 6.

YOGHURT DILL CUCUMBER SALAD

2 large cucumbers
½ tsp. salt
½ cup plain yoghurt
1 tsp. dill weed, or ½ tsp. dried dill weed or seed
lettuce cups

Pare cucumbers and shred on a coarse shredder, using only the part without seeds. Sprinkle with salt and let stand at room temperature for 1 hour or longer. Pour off the liquid which has formed. Stir in dill and yoghurt. Add pepper if desired. Chill then spoon into lettuce cups. Good with fish. Serves 4 to 6.

EMERALD SALAD

10 oz. pkg. spinach leaves, washed and drained
¼ lb. fresh raw mushrooms, sliced
2 grapefruits, sectioned or 1 can sections, drained
¼ cup oil
2 tbsps. vinegar
2 tbsps. grapefruit juice
1 tbsp. soy sauce

¼ tsp. tabasco
¼ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. dry mustard
½ tsp. chopped fresh basil or marjoram or ¼ tsp. dried

Tear spinach into large salad bowl. Add fruit and mushrooms. Blend all remaining ingredients to make dressing. Pour over all. Toss lightly. Serve cold. Serves 6.

RICE SALAD

1 cup uncooked rice

6 tbsps. oil
3 tbsps. white vinegar
1 tsp. salt
dash of white pepper
1 tsp. dried tarragon
½ cup chopped green pepper
¼ cup chopped fresh parsley
¼ cup finely chopped onion or leeks
1 cup drained, cooked peas
1 cucumber
tomato slices
olives

shredded greens

Cook rice according to package directions until it is just tender. Drain if necessary. Meanwhile, prepare dressing by combining oil, vinegar and seasonings. Blend and pour over rice while it is hot so that flavors may be absorbed. Cool. Add vegetables and herbs. Chill. Slice cucumber and garnish salad with the slices and tomatoes, olives and greens. Serves 6.

Telling It Like It Is

What Happened To U.S. Jews

(Part One)

By JOAN SILBERSTEIN

Prior to the June War in 1967, I was typical of many thousands of second generation heard Yiddish spoken at home. Both my parents were born in America and were successfully Americanized.

In the main, my Judaic education consisted of once-weekly classes at Sunday school, which made less of an impression on me than Andy Gump and Dick Tracy in the Sunday funnies. Religious observance in our house, such as it was, confined itself to synagogue attendance on Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur.

EVERY CHRISTMAS I sang carols in school, only balking at phrases like "Christ the Lord," which I hummed instead. There was an annual battle between my parents about "What will the goyim think if we let the children have a Christmas tree," but my brothers and I always got one and were taken to see Santa Claus as part of the bargain. This is the way it really was. We were American and being Jewish was part of us, but it was a peripheral matter.

In 1948, I was 13. The creation of the State of Israel and its continued existence went by me unnoticed — until the 32nd year of my life. That was when I met Hy Faine, then President of the Labor Zionist Organization of America. That meeting and the friendship that developed from it totally and irrevocably changed my life.

IT WAS HY who taught me what Zionism is. Basically, Zionism holds that Jews are a PEOPLE and that Israel is the spiritual center of Jewish life. Up until that moment, Judaism had been purely a religion for me, and this new definition dropped like a stone into my being — disturbing the fabric of my life and raising mountainous questions.

If the Jews are a people and I am a Jew, then are not the Jews MY people? But I am an American and the Americans are a PEOPLE, so are not the Americans MY people? Can I, without conflict, belong to TWO peoples?

If Israel is the spiritual center of Jewish life and all Jews living outside Israel are living in the Diaspora, the places of dispersion, then in living in America am I not living in self-imposed exile?

TO RESOLVE these questions I was impelled, not by Hy Faine but by deep currents in my own being, perhaps subconscious currents, to re-order the priorities of my existence. The conclusion that I personally have reached is that Israel holds priority number one in my life. On July 1, I will make my aliyah. Thereafter, I will be writing my columns for you from Jerusalem.

What has happened to me will serve to demonstrate, by example, that the Zionist movement can, at the least, return assimilated and/or unaffiliated Jews to Judaism. At best, it can return them to Israel.

In my column next week, I will report to you on the newly established American Zionist Federation, which held its first national convention in May. Based on an interview with Hy Faine, now Honorary President of LZOA, that article will invite your interest and participation in bringing Zionism to American Jewry.

Obituary

Dr. Robert MacIver Of MacIver Report

NEW YORK — Dr. Robert M. MacIver, famed sociologist at Columbia University-New School here, and author of the "MacIver Report" which challenged duplication in Jewish agencies nearly 20 years ago, died at 88.

It was MacIver, who retired recently from Columbia as Lieber Professor of Sociology and Political Science, who set out in 1950 to survey the anti-defamation work of the member agencies of the National Community Relations Advisory Council.

The results of the MacIver report which suggested "merger, consolidation and elimination of wasteful duplication," caused major rifts among national Jewish agencies. The Anti-Defamation League withdrew from the NCRAC as a result.

Censor Board Bans Showing Of MASH

TEL AVIV — Because of the "irreverent" attitude toward wounded and dead in battle, the Israeli Censorship Board has banned the showing of M-A-S-H, America's Cannes Film Festival award winner.

Variety, the weekly show business newspaper, reported the banning seemed to reflect the general mood of the country.

Because there are soldiers and civilians dying daily under Arab fire and terrorist attacks, the Censorship Board said, there is no room to accept war casualties as hilarious or war itself as a silly matter.

Jerusalem Cops Hit Eliezer; Take Sign

Editor, POST and OPINION:
Yesterday, Shavout, I was standing at Jaffa Gate with the same message as at Pesach. It was 5 p.m. and the police soon invited me to come to the station for a friendly talk. When I refused, a policeman was stationed in front of me with orders to keep people moving if they stopped to read the message.

Meanwhile, a detective with a walkie-talkie was in constant contact with police headquarters to receive instructions on what to do with me.

Most Israelis obeyed police orders to keep moving. Those sturdy characters who stopped to read the message were soon faced with the wrath of the police. I was standing by the wall of the gate to make sure the police couldn't charge me with obstructing the passage. There was no disturbance of any kind. The crowd was courteous, as no one cursed or threatened.

After a half hour, the police finally got the okay from headquarters. Six policemen stationed themselves around me and I was ordered to enter the squad car. When I refused, they used force and this time not the minimum as previously. First they tried to tear the sign away. It took them five minutes to do this and dump me in the car, twisting my arms.

I was driven to police headquarters. While sitting in the office, a police sergeant suddenly burst in, and with full force slapped me in the face. He was angry because I did not obey his orders to come to the station. It was the first time in 17 years that I have ever been hit while held in a station. His number is 19953. I remember it well because it was in 1953 that I first carried a sign in Chicago. Policeman 22908 was kind to the stranger.

After an hour I was released but without the sign. In the more than 16 years of marching in America, the police have only once refused to return a sign. In the last three months, the police have confiscated three signs with this message in the Holy City of Jerusalem:

DID WE SUFFER MARTYRDOM AND KEEP OUR FAITH 1900 YEARS JUST FOR A STATE TO BE LIKE OTHER NATIONS? MUST JERUSALEM BECOME LIKE PARIS, ROME OR NEW YORK? WHAT IS ISRAEL WITHOUT TORAH?

Eliezer, a servant of G-d
Today I went to the mayor's office, as I know my friends from America would urge me to see Teddy Kollek. I wrote a brief summary and handed it to his secretary. A young man who identified himself as an assistant to the mayor, came out and kindly informed me that this is strictly a police matter and has nothing to do with the mayor. Off I went to police headquarters. In the hall I met Chief Bar Eli. He refused to talk to me, but sent me to his secretary, a police sergeant who was very rude to the stranger.

Then I went to the officer who was in charge of the station on Shavuot and asked for the sign. He took me into another office and told his fellow officers that, "This is the character with the sign and he wants it back." They rudely informed me that they broke it and said I should see a psychiatrist.

The police say I need a permit. The city will not give a permit. The mayor's office says this is strictly a police matter. Where does one go from here? I sure could use Joel Sprayregen, the young fighting Civil Liberties Union attorney. He first defended me in court in 1959 when the officials of Temple Isaiah accused me falsely, and constantly defended my constitutional rights up until late 1969 when I left America.

I think often of him and remember him in our prayers, as he has kept me out of jail many times and intervened in 1960 when the Chicago police wanted to commit me to a mental hospital.

My twisted right hand is swollen and I am unable to work. I cannot blame the police, as they only take orders. I know that the order to prevent me from carrying G-d's message comes from a higher official than the chief of police.

I now ask all those who believe in a living G-d of Israel to write to the Embassy of Israel. Ask them why a servant of the G-d of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob is prohibited from carrying a message to the people at the gate on Shavuot. I ask this not for my sake, but for Israel's sake. If His messenger is not permitted to stand at the gate, while many Arab vendors are permitted to sell their merchandise at the gate, will that not kindle the wrath of G-d?

Another Reform Rabbi Joins The Robeless

MONROEVILLE, Pa., — The growing movement in the Reform Rabbinate to doff the robe and don the kippoh (yarmulke) has won another convert in Rabbi Jason Z. Edelstein.

The spiritual leader of Temple David in this suburb of Pittsburgh announced that he would no longer wear a ministerial robe at services, but only the kippoh and the tallis.

The rabbi wrote in the Temple David Bulletin that the only exception to this practice would be during the High

Holydays when "it is in accordance with Jewish tradition to wear a white robe beneath the tallis."

Rabbi Edelstein added, "One should be free to pray in whatever garb, ceremonial or otherwise, one wishes. This has been our attitude in the past and it remains so."

NAVAL CIRCLES IN ISRAEL expect that units of the U.S. Sixth Fleet will shortly pay a formal visit to Israel's ports as an indication of American friendship.

A NEW AGENCY designed to serve the needs of Jewish college students on 40 or so campuses in the Greater New York area is being mapped by the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of New York. Federation won't operate the agency but will provide financial backing to YMHAs, Jewish family service groups, Hillel Foundations and independent agencies now serving Jews on some New York campuses. Federation, incidentally, will shortly announce the findings of a massive study of Jewish education in the Greater New York which was made by Dr. Hyman Chanower.

THE FIVE-MAN GROUP of Israel experts now working in Cambodia has not interrupted its operations there despite fighting nearby. They are teaching the Cambodians farm management, and have been doing research seeking to raise production.

MELVIN BLOOM, A PR man whose experience is in the general PR field and in the non-sectarian agency area, has been named the new PR director of the United Jewish Appeal as of August 1.

GREECE, WHICH FOR THE PAST 22 years has given only nominal, de-facto recognition to Israel, is expected to decide soon on official, de-jure recognition. This will involve full diplomatic relations, though it may yet be some time before a Greek ambassador takes up residence in Israel because of Greece's relations with the Arab states.

A popular lecturer, Dr. Roth had spoken before many American audiences over the period of the past several decades. He was a familiar figure in American Jewish scholarly circles.

Most of his teaching life was spent at Oxford University where from 1939 to 1964 he was a reader in Jewish studies.

His published works include "History of the Jews in Venice," "History of the Marranos," "A Short History of the Jewish People," "Personalities and Events in Jewish History."

Rabbi S. Twersky

HAIFA — Rabbi Sholem Twersky, a descendant of the Ba'al Shem Tov, and leader of the Hassidic movement in Los Angeles from 1946 to 1956, died here recently. Rabbi Twersky had lived here with his wife since 1956, after leaving Los Angeles where he held Hassidic services in his home in Beverly Hills.

In 1965, Dr. Roth published "The Dead Sea Scrolls: A New Historical Approach," in which he challenged the assumption that the scrolls found in caves close to the Dead Sea were left by a pacifist, pre-Christian sect in ancient Palestine. The scholar contended that the scrolls were the work of the Sicarii Zealots, a warlike sect that led the Jewish revolt against Rome beginning in A.D. 66.

Israel Awaits Return Of Hanna To The Stage

By MENDEL KOHANSKY Munich.

For weeks all of Israel had been holding its breath, waiting for the hourly broadcast bulletins on the state of health of Hanna Meron, the actress wounded in the murderous attack on an El Al plane in

In a manner reminiscent of the period preceding the Six Day War, people were seen in the streets walking with little transistor radios glued to their ears. One shop selling electric equipment on Tel Aviv's busy Allenby Road set up a loud-speaker outside for the benefit of passers by, and clusters of people congregated there on the hour. When in the middle of the day the news sounded ominous, strangers stood in groups talking, and there were tears in many eyes.

As usual, it took a tragic accident for the nation to realize how much Hanna Meron means to the people in Israel, though it has for years been a generally accepted fact that she was the country's leading actress — this not counting, of course, the great Hanna Rovina of Habimah who had already years ago assumed the status of a national monument.

HANNA MERON'S popularity spans three generations: The older people remember her as the daring young actress in "Pick Up Girls," their sons and daughters enjoyed her only recently as Hedda Gabler in the Ibsen play and in the title role in "Hello Dolly," children love her as the throaty voice with the subtle humor which tells them stories over the radio and on records.

She is undoubtedly also the most versatile actress in Israel. The range of her talent is truly astonishing. She is equally at home in sophisticated comedy as she is in great drama, and she has scored some of her biggest successes in farce and even in a musical.

Born only forty-seven years ago in Germany, she has had a stage career spanning more than four decades. She began as a child actress in her native country; few people know that she was the little girl who was killed by a maniac in the famous horror picture "M", the killer played by Peter Lorre.

SHE ARRIVED in Palestine still a child, and after finishing her schooling joined the Habimah acting studio conducted by the late Zvi Friedland. After a stint with the British Army in World War II, she became a member of Habimah, but soon a new project beckoned which was to shape her career for the years to come.

It was 1944, the Hebrew theatre was in one of its periodic doldrums, and a young man, Yosef Millo, thought of a new company which would bring a fresh, youthful spirit to the theatrical life of the country. It was natural for Hanna Meron, the young, impatient, spirited actress, to leave the staid Habimah and join the new venture.

Her appearance in the comedy, "The Servant of Two Masters," immediately made the public aware of the new talent on the firmament. The show was a great success; it was for the first time in years that a Tel Aviv audience stood up and cheered when the final curtain rang down.

Three years later Hanna Meron really came into her own with her performance in a rather shallow play "Pick Up Girls," where she portrayed a girl of the streets. The show itself was sort of a milestone in the Hebrew theatre which at that time still suffered (and has not fully liberated itself to this day) from a vestigial puritanism brought to the country by the early pioneers. It was the first time that the translation of a play in Israel employed words one does not ordinarily pronounce in polite company.

Israel Awaits Return

THE YOUNG PEOPLE were delighted, while their elders were shocked. Hanna Meron herself told me how after the premiere she met in the street the veteran Habimah actor Yehoshua Bertinov who congratulated her on her performance, and then added in his famous deep basso, "but Hanele, how could you bring yourself to use such words on the stage, and in the holy Hebrew tongue too?"

She was the embodiment of the suffering of a generation of Jewish girls of the World War II period when she appeared in 1948 in Moshe Shamir's, "He Walked Through the Fields," as Micah, the Polish girl who went through the hell of a Nazi concentration camp to finally wind up in a kibbutz, fall in love with a local boy and lose him in the War of Liberation. She revealed to the Israeli public the wisdom and wit of Bernard Shaw as the charming Liza Dolittle of "Pygmalion," a girl of the slums who becomes a lady under the tutelage of Professor Higgins. She went on to classical roles and was an unforgettable Mary Queen of Scots in the play by Schiller.

When in the late 'fifties the Cameri company went through a crisis which threatened to liquidate the theatre, it was Hanna Meron who with two of her colleagues took over the management and pulled the Cameri out of the mire. In the coming years, whenever the theatre was in financial straits after unsuccessful productions, it was enough to put on a play with her in the leading role in order to repair the damage. One such case took place only two years ago; Hanna Meron's playing in Noel Coward's "Hayfever," filled the Cameri's hall for the first time in several months.

IN 1968 HANNA Meron astonished her public when she took on the title part in "Hello Dolly," this time not in her own theatre but with a commercial production company. It sounded like a joke, but it was a joke everybody, including the actress, thoroughly enjoyed. As one critic wrote, it was as if she had through all those years been masquerading as a dramatic actress while she had been born a musical comedy star. It was also generally conceded that had it not been for her, the musical would have closed after three performances.

With her it ran for a long time. The mute scene in which she devours a large meal while sitting alone and silent became classic. People went to the show for a second time just to watch her do that. People also went to watch for surprises. Bored with appearing in the same role night after night, she would improvise lines, engage in conversation with the audience, confuse the other performers with unexpected sallies.

Several days before the attack she began rehearsals for another of her classical roles, as Meda in the play by Seneca. She took leave for three days in order to go to London where she was to sign up for an appearance in the movie version of "Fiddler on the Roof," as the wife of Tevye the Milkman, the latter played by another Israeli, Chaim Topol. The whole of Israel prays and hopes and awaits the day that she will be seen on the stage again, her amputated leg only a badge of her courage and her heroism.

Negev's Lonely Revivim Faces Its Problems

(Reprinted from The Jewish Observer and Middle East Review)

If you have any doubts about what is the real Negev, they are dissolved almost as soon as the last sprawling apartment houses of Beersheba disappear mirage-like into the increasingly vast emptiness. If you happen to be going to Eilat, you know that at the end of a most fascinating tour through stark geology you will be rewarded by a gem-like azure sea set at the foot of craggy rose-tinted granite mountains. But if you head towards Revivim, i.e., turn westwards after a half hour's journey from the Negev's capital, your only hope is to see more and more desert, for that road eventually leads to Sinai. The more you travel through the Negev, the more you appreciate those flourishing patches of refreshing green which indicate from a distance the location of a kibbutz. What kind of people live there and why?

From the very beginning, Revivim wanted to be a large settlement. A group of youngsters, mostly bachelors, organized themselves in 1939 with an eye to founding a sizeable settlement in the Negev. The idea was to develop the Negev and lay the foundations for widespread settlement. Second, to explore the possibilities of agriculture, and third to bring to the spot a number of people large enough to ensure social and economic self-sufficiency in such a location. The Negev, through Jewish settlement, would become de facto a part of the Jewish homeland despite mandatory resistance to the "aggrandizement" of Jewish-held territory.

FROM THE END of the 1930's, the Jewish National Fund embarked upon a programme of creating footholds for Jewish National settlements in the Negev. First, it concentrated in its hands the few private Jewish holdings in the area. Then it set out systematically to enlarge them through new acquisitions, in spite of the difficulties created by the land regulations of the 1939 White Paper of the Mandatory Government. In the summer of 1943, the first three "observation outpost settlements" Beth Eshel, Gevulot and Revivim were set up in different corners of the Negev. Revivim was the southernmost, its conditions the most trying and its ambitions the boldest.

In 1945, another group of settlers joined Revivim and after the War of Independence, a third group supplemented the settlers. The main problem was water. By chance, during the first winter a partial solution presented itself. The settlers were awakened one night by a thunderous roar. Scrambling to discover the cause, the settlers found that a flash flood was rolling down through the normally dry wadi. The sight of all that fresh water racing to the sea set them thinking, and the next morning found them building a dam and channeling the floodwaters to irrigate their fields.

THE LAKE CREATED by the dam was less successful, as the water collected soon filtered away into the depths. This was a disappointment, but the people of Revivim did not give up. They prepared for grain cultivation the same low-lying area originally earmarked for the artificial lake, and even planted fruit trees there. When the next flood came through, its waters were again diverted to the area, soaked the soil, and the moisture held in the soil sufficed to sustain the crops over several months. Another part of the flood waters was collected in a small asphalt-bottomed pool, mixing fresh water with the highly saline well years, the amount of flood- waters running through the wadis is erratic and differs with each flood. A regular source of water was the only answer to Revivim's problem, and later water was piped down from more northern wells, but the quantity was insufficient. In 1951, Revivim's water battles became a public concern, because it was obvious that the Negev could support large numbers of people if only water were available. It was not until 1959 that Revivim won the water battle. At that time the kibbutz was connected with the National Water Carrier, and irrigation became much less of an obstacle to development.

Negev Settlement Has Uphill Battle

(Continued from Preceding Pg.) on because of the peculiarity water which the kibbutz used. of rainwater reaching the This proved useful as an addi- Negev. tional source of irrigation In dry years rain is water, but could not be counted negligible, and even in wet

Today the kibbutz has some 8,500 dunams under cultivation. It grows gladioli, export potatoes, artichokes and peppers. Its fruits include peaches, apricots, pears, apples and grapes. It has about 100 milkers in the dairy barn, and the poultry run produces breeders to be sold to other chicken raisers as well as turning out eggs and meat for marketing. A small factory (employing some 10-15 kibbutzniks) turns out mechanical farm items, i.e., conveyers for grain elevators, potato peelers, tender tops, etc.

WHEN YOU COME in out of the desert, so to speak, Revivim seems to be a lush and rather large oasis. That same feeling of limitlessness prevails in the kibbutz itself, with wide green public lawns and stretches of house-to-house grass carpeting. Graceful trees adorn the commons and gaily colored flowers create bright spots in the gardens which encompass every house. Children seem to be everywhere and of all ages. There are 190 of them and the oldest are going into the 12th grade this year. The kibbutz has its own school, and boasts of newly outfitted science laboratories.

There are some 200 members up with the work it lost during in the kibbutz. But they are not the Six-Day War period. satisfied with their number. Revivim is an example par excellence of what the JNF has been trying to accomplish. Despite the communications revolution wrought since state- hood, Revivim remains to all intents and purposes an isolated spot. The secretary maintains that Revivim is capable of absorbing 100 new members per year and the kibbutz is always ready to take groups of youngsters. Presently there are about 50 volunteers from abroad who are helping Revivim catch Negev.

Abraham's Oak Still Green

By MALKAH RAYMIST

"Then Abraham removed his tent, and came and dwelt in the plain of Mamre, which is in Hebron, and built there an altar unto the Lord."

(Genesis: 13, 18).

Abraham's Oak still stands today on the Plain of Mamre, near Hebron. Before telling you more about it, I advise the reader to look up Genesis,

Chapter 18, verses 1 to 17, which tells the story of Abraham, "the friend of God," in whom the Lord confided and with whom He conversed. Here we read of the three angels who, in the guise of travellers, came to Abraham when he had reached a ripe old age, and announced that a son would be born unto him. Upon seeing them, Abraham bade them sit in the shade of a tree, while he went to prepare food and drink for them.

"Let a little water, I pray you, be fetched, and wash your feet, and rest yourselves under the tree."

(Genesis: 18, 4).

Legend has it that the tree was an oak, one of the many which made up the grove of Mamre, and grew close to the place where Abraham had his tent. Of the oak grove of Mamre only a handful of trees remain today, all of which are obviously much younger than the one under which Abraham had seated the three angels. However, there is one solitary oak whose age it is impossible to determine. It looks so ancient and shrivelled, that Hebronites believe it to be the very same oak under which Abraham granted hospitality to the heavenly envoys. It can be reached by a few minutes ride from the centre of Hebron, the City of Abraham, in the heart of Judaea.

THE NAME HEBRON in Hebrew Hebron — comes from the word Haver — a friend, comrade, companion. Abraham — "the Friend" of God. In Arabic Hebron is called Khaleel, which is short for Medinatul Ibrahim Khaleel Allah (the City of Abraham, the Friend of the Lord). For there it was that Abraham dwelt, there the angels announced to him the birth of a son, and there it was that he discussed with the Lord the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, and argued valiantly that the lives of righteous men be spared. (Genesis: 18, 16-33).

The Oak That's Still Green

Abraham's Oak is revered equally by Jews, Christians and Moslems, just as the City of Hebron is considered a Holy City because the Patriarchs are buried there. The oak itself is an ageless and weather-beaten tree, most of it dead, its wood gnawed almost to the core by insects which have been living in it for many centuries, burrowing, breeding, feeding, and gradually destroying its old trunk. Yet one long branch, growing sideways from the dead trunk, is green. The oak not only lives, but it blossoms every spring and bears small, perfectly shaped acorns.

Christian pilgrims who travelled to the Holy Land in the 4th century mentioned Abraham's Oak. One of them wrote: "There is a holy oak in the vicinity of Hebron. It is not very tall, obviously very ancient, its branches spread far out and bowed down to the ground. The trunk and branches are so twisted and gnarled that one wonders how it is that the tree remains alive..." This was written 15 centuries ago — and yet the oak lives on.

IT BELONGS to the local variety called Quercus Palestinensis, and has small egg-shaped leaves with saw-like indentations. It is an evergreen and its acorns are half the size of those of European or American oaks.

Though revered as holy, the tree remained unprotected until 1968, when a small plot round it was purchased by the Russian Church, which was acquiring property in the Holy Land.

After the sale of the plot, which belonged to a Hebron Arab, the local population, incited by fanatical Moslem clergy, attempted to burn the oak in order to spite its new owners — the Moscovite Patriarchate. Soon after that, a stone fence was built around it, and a watchman hired to protect it. Abraham's Oak remains one of the assets of the Russian Church.

Jerusalem's Future Stresses Beauty, History

Medieval tradition held that Jerusalem was the true location of the center of the world. If you have any doubts there is a spot in the marble floor of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre in the walled Old City section that marks the exact location.

While the tradition may not meet with acceptance by contemporary man, well schooled of her significance defies measurement.

THE HISTORY OF Jerusalem is so well chronicled in the Bible that it has become a part of the history of us all. Through this pageant of the past, events have molded belief and belief has molded events, until it seems that every square inch of the city has its own story. In many locations the significance is tamped down in layers and each period; Pre-biblical, Biblical, Roman, Byzantine, Crusader, and Turkish is flattened out in pancakes of interest below the streets and houses of living Jerusalem.

Jerusalem today is a Renaissance city. The date of the new beginning is June, 1967. For though Jerusalem showed development before that date it was the progress of a divided city. On the Jordanian side it developed as a center for the agrarian West Bank; on the Israeli side it developed as the educational and administrative capital.

The man with the greatest responsibility in this contemporary Renaissance is Mayor Teddy Kollek. Even before June 1967, while still Director General of the Prime Minister's Office, he was instrumental in the establishment of the Israel Museum. This Museum, already world renowned for its collection of biblical archeology has been rapidly-gaining strength in the other arts as well, and stands every chance of becoming one of the world's great Museums.

MAYOR KOLLEK is in the key position at a time when the most important part of the Israeli national dream has come true. Jerusalem is united under Jewish administration after a break in continuity that lasted nearly 2,000 years. It is this which is most responsible for the reawakened Jerusalem visible today.

Beauty, History Stressed By Jerusalem

(Continued from Preceding Pg.) It is the color of the limestone formations on which the city is built. It is also the color of the stone buildings characteristic of the city. Dust blown from the deserts to the East puts a haze in the summer sky and settles in a thin dull patina on all that is beneath. So it was in Turkish times, and so it is today in the older sections of the city. But throughout the city, today as it must have been in other times of Jerusalem national vitality, there is a counter-point of color. The dominant rose-pink is matched with the browns and greens of gardens and trees.

LONG ROWS of newly planted trees marched up the main roads of the city. Small parks, patches of emerald and tan, are spotted in quiet corners of the city. Oleander and Cyprus, Olive and Bouganvillia, all have a place in the plan which has one goal: To give Jerusalem a physical beauty which will match the image cherished by its people.

The largest gardening project of all those planned is the landscaping of the newly cleared areas surrounding the walls of the Old City. International experts have consulted with Israeli architects in efforts to find a plan which will complement the soaring stone walls, and at the same time provide a place where a man may rest away from the stark Mediterranean glare.

Work has already begun on the gardens and coincides with the actual repair of the walls. It is a laborious time consuming project that calls for the removal of damaged stones individually and their replacement with new stone matching in texture and size. Eventually, hanging gardens will grace the tops of the turreted walls.

The Citadel of David is a landmark site in Jerusalem. Its tall minaret rises dramatically from the walls of the Old City. Through the years it was used as a military fortress, but today it has been rededicated to a finer purpose. An archeological museum with its relics in place, it was used for the opening performance of the Israel Festival of Music and Drama this year, and will eventually become the site of a Museum to the history of the City of Jerusalem.

THE RESTFUL EXTERIOR of the Old City is only one of projects planned. Within the walls there is today a teeming population of Moslems and Christians. Over the years to come an attempt will be made to reduce the cramped conditions by offering more attractive accommodations beyond the walls. In the end this would allow the millions of the Old City is only one of (Continued on Next Page) who love the city to embark on a program that would expose those places of historic and emotional value which are now covered by an ugly jumble of recent construction.

The effective use of light is making Jerusalem a city that pulses with activity at night as well as by day. Giant lamps shed a soft glow on the outside wall of the Old City, on the Government buildings to the west, on the Churches of the city and on Israel's magnificent Parliament Building. A tour by night is a breathtaking experience cherished together with the million other memories of Jerusalem.

While the visible vitality of Jerusalem is physical, the hidden vitality is spiritual. Hints of it are seen in the totality of the Jewish Sabbath in the new city. In the sound of the Moslem Mezzuin calling the faithful to prayer, in the bells of the churches of Jerusalem ringing out on a Sunday morning. The wakening is a part of the passionate discussions of its citizens as they mingle in a mixture of language and custom.

THE RENAISSANCE is a part of an emergence from provincialism, characteristic of both parts of Jerusalem before June, 1967; to an awareness of their power to shape Jerusalem's destiny.

In Hebrew it is written, "From Zion will come the Law, and from Jerusalem the word of the Lord."

If history and the will of a people are an indication of what will be, vital awakened "Renaissance Jerusalem" will continue to secure its place in the center of our thoughts.

LOOKING BACK

15 years ago — Calls were issued this week by the Jewish National Fund council for volunteers to gather boxes placed throughout the city to gather funds.

Hadassah launched a one-day drive to begin June 27 for 100 new members for the organization.

10 years ago — Irving Levibe, executive director of the Indiana Jewish Community Relations Council, speaking to a group of ministers, called for clergymen to help put an end to discrimination in housing.

A community mission to Israel is being organized by the Jewish Welfare Federation. Samuel Ziffrin is the tour chairman.

The Indianapolis Section of the National Council of Jewish Women will sponsor a benefit performance of "Goodbye Charlie," at the play's opening night at the Avondale Theater.

5 years ago — More than $40,000 has been raised to build the New B'nai Torah Synagogue it was announced this week.

The annual meeting of the Jewish Welfare Federation will be held July 25. Mrs. Louis Fink will be chairman of the annual meeting and Manuel Leve is chairman of the nominating committee.
